OPENING BUSINESS

Judge John Bates, Chair of the Standing Committee, called the meeting to order and welcomed members of the public who were attending in person. He also welcomed new Standing Committee member Judge Paul Barbadoro and bade farewell to two members soon to depart the committee, Robert Giuffra and Judge Carolyn Kuhl. Judge Kuhl and Mr. Giuffra gave brief departing comments, and Judge Bates thanked them for their service.

Upon motion by a member, seconded by another, and without opposition: The Standing Committee approved the minutes of the January 4, 2023, meeting.

Judge Bates remarked that a chart tracking the status of rules amendments commenced on page 52 of the agenda book. Mr. Thomas Byron, Secretary of the Standing Committee, noted that the latest set of proposed rule amendments had been transmitted from the Supreme Court to Congress in April.

JOINT COMMITTEE BUSINESS

Electronic Filing by Self-Represented Litigants

Professor Catherine Struve reported on this item, which is under consideration by the Appellate, Bankruptcy, Civil, and Criminal Rules Committees.

Professor Struve recalled that this project had benefited from discussions in the advisory committees, from which important questions arose about the practical logistics of electronic access to the courts. Armed with those questions, she and Dr. Tim Reagan of the FJC held conversations with 17 court personnel in nine districts that had broadened electronic access for self-represented litigants. Professor Struve expressed appreciation for Dr. Reagan's expert guidance concerning these inquiries.

One of their primary areas of inquiry was whether there is any reason to require traditional service by a self-represented litigant on other litigants who already receive notices of electronic filing ("NEFs"). Among the districts whose personnel they interviewed, seven districts exempt self-represented litigants from making such traditional service on CM/ECF participants: the District of Arizona, the Northern District of Illinois, the Western District of Missouri, the Southern District of New York, the Western District of Pennsylvania, the District of South Carolina, and the District of Utah.

In those districts, exempting self-represented litigants from paper service added no burden on the courts' clerk's offices. When self-represented litigants file non-electronically, the clerk's offices already scan those paper filings and upload them to CM/ECF. There are some exceptions to the exemption from making traditional service; notably, filings under seal that are not available to other litigants via CM/ECF must be served on the other litigants by traditional means, but in those circumstances the courts require paper service by anyone making such a sealed filing. That would be true for either a self-represented litigant or a CM/ECF participant.

Professor Struve observed that the exemption from making traditional service exists only when the recipient is receiving NEFs (because they are enrolled either in CM/ECF or in a court-provided electronic-noticing system). A self-represented litigant who does not receive NEFs will need to be served by traditional means. A filer who is receiving NEFs will learn from the NEF who, if anyone, must be served by traditional means. But if a paper filer is not receiving NEFs, one must ask how that filer will know whether any other litigants in the case are also not receiving NEFs. The universal answer from court personnel was that it just is not an issue.

She thought that this question would likely be an issue only in a vanishingly small number of cases—in part because there would need to be multiple self-represented litigants in the case. She also believes there are ways to craft an exemption from the traditional service requirement to take care of that situation and to ensure that anybody who needs traditional service does get it without burdening non-CM/ECF-filing self-represented litigants with superfluous paper service. She plans to convene a Zoom working-group meeting over the summer to discuss a potential amendment about an exemption from service.

Interviewees were also asked whether and how self-represented litigants obtain access to CM/ECF. About six or seven of the districts covered in the interviews offer some degree of access to CM/ECF for self-represented litigants. At least two of those districts do not require any special permission from the court, and the other districts allow it with court permission. Interviewees from those districts identified a number of benefits from providing that access. It decreased the number of paper filings, saved the court time from scanning documents, avoided the need to have the court serve orders in paper, and averted disputes about what was actually filed and whether a filing had all its pages. There were some reports of burdens as well as notes about the need to make sure there is adequate staffing for technical support and training. There were also some interesting anecdotes about how the courts deal with inappropriate filings. But overall, the report from these districts was positive. As one respondent put it, the benefits outweigh the risks.

Professor Struve further reported that courts are experimenting with increasing electronic access by disaggregating the elements of access via CM/ECF and providing them “à la carte.” For example, some courts permit other means of electronic submission through upload or through email, and interviewees from those courts listed a number of benefits from those programs. One prominent benefit was not having to scan paper filings. She noted that many of the respondent districts also provided their own electronic-noticing systems, which benefited the courts because the recipients of NEFs no longer need to receive paper copies of court orders.

Electronic-Filing Deadline

Judge Bates reported on this item.

Judge Michael Chagares, currently the Chief Judge of the Third Circuit, first raised this suggestion some years ago in his capacity as Chair of the Appellate Rules Committee. The suggestion was to change the presumptive electronic-filing deadline set by the time-counting rules to a time earlier than midnight. The objective was to promote a positive work environment for young associates who were working until midnight to get court filings done. A joint subcommittee considered this suggestion, but it did not take any action at the time.

Recently, the Third Circuit adopted a local rule making the filing deadline earlier in the day. The Standing Committee has therefore referred the matter back to the joint subcommittee, which needs to be recomposed. The joint committee will re-examine the issue and decide whether to propose a rules amendment or perhaps whether it might be better to let the experiment in the Third Circuit run its course for a couple of years to see how things go.

A judge member noted that the Third Circuit's new local rule has elicited an almost entirely negative reaction from members of the bar. A practitioner member argued that this rule change, though well-intentioned, would not make people's lives better. Moving the deadline earlier will simply ruin the night before. Setting the deadline at five o'clock will really wreak havoc for many practitioners. Moreover, even if this deadline is not so bad for appellate lawyers—whose briefing schedule is more predictable and who are not engaged in fact development—it would play out differently in the district courts.

District-Court Bar Admission Rules

Judge Bates reported on this item. Several of the advisory committees received a proposal from Alan Morrison and others on a unified bar-admission rule. The proposal would make admission to one federal district court good for all federal district courts. It would also centralize the disciplinary process that goes along with court admissions.

A joint subcommittee has been formed with representatives from the Advisory Committees on Civil, Criminal, and Bankruptcy Rules to review the proposal over the course of the next year or two. That review may also require some work by the FJC. Professors Struve and Andrew Bradt will be the reporters for the joint subcommittee. Judge Bates thanked them and the members of the joint subcommittee for their work.

An academic member commented that a similar proposal had come up in the past and had a very fraught life. A consultant agreed with the academic member's remarks. A previous proposal had managed to unify all the local and state bar associations in America against it.

REPORT OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON APPELLATE RULES

Judge Jay Bybee and Professor Edward Hartnett presented the report of the Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules, which last met in West Palm Beach, Florida, on March 29, 2023. The advisory committee presented three action items and two information items. The advisory committee's report and the draft minutes of its last meeting were included in the agenda book beginning at page 70.

Action Items

Amendments to Rules 35 (En Banc Determination) and 40 (Petition for Panel Rehearing) and Conforming Changes to Rule 32 (Form of Briefs, Appendices, and Other Papers) and the Appendix of Length Limits. Judge Bybee introduced this item. The advisory committee sought final approval of these proposed amendments, which appeared starting on page 103 of the agenda book.

The advisory committee had received a handful of public comments, which were listed in pages 72–75 of the agenda book. The advisory committee did not recommend any changes in response to those comments.

The proposal consolidates Rule 35 into Rule 40. It does not make any substantive changes to the basis for seeking rehearing from the panel or rehearing en banc. The proposal tries to simplify and clarify the rules, particularly in response to several comments received about the multitude of pro se filings.

A judge member agreed with the rule’s statement that rehearing en banc is disfavored. The member asked for additional background on that language. Judge Bybee noted that the language was already in the rule; the proposal did not add it. The judge member observed that some of the public comments had disagreed with that language. Professor Hartnett responded that the advisory committee had been unmoved by those comments because they were at such odds with the usual, uncontroversial practice in the courts of appeals.

Upon motion by a member, seconded by another, and without opposition: The Standing Committee approved the proposed amendments to Rules 32, 35, and 40 and the Appendix of Length Limits.

Amendment to Rule 39 (Costs). Judge Bybee introduced this item. The advisory committee sought approval to publish this proposed amendment for public comment. The proposed amendment appeared starting at page 149 of the agenda book.

In City of San Antonio v. Hotels.com, 141 S. Ct. 1628 (2021), the Supreme Court invited the advisory committee to clarify what costs are recoverable on appeal and who has the responsibility for allocating those costs. This proposed amendment does so. It makes a change in nomenclature by clarifying the distinction between “allocating” costs and “taxing” costs. “Allocating” means deciding who is going to pay, and “taxing” means deciding how much is going to be paid. The responsibility for taxing is divided, under the rules, between the district courts and the courts of appeals. The proposed amendment also clarifies the procedure for asking the court of appeals to reconsider the question of allocation.

A question not addressed by the proposed rule is what to do about requiring disclosure of the costs associated with a supersedeas bond, which was the context for Hotels.com. In that case, there was a very large bond, whose costs were shifted from one party to the other after the case was over. It was possible that the party that had not sought the bond was going to end up with significant costs that it may not have anticipated.

As the advisory committee considered this rule, it could not come up with a good mechanism within the appellate rules for ensuring that disclosure, so the proposed amendment does not address it. It is fairly rare, but when it does come up, it can be a serious problem, so the advisory committee recommended that the Civil Rules Committee consider whether an amendment to Civil Rule 62 might address disclosure.

An academic member asked whether any thought had been given to whether the change in terminology (“allocating” versus “taxing”) might cause confusion. Judge Bybee reported that the advisory committee had carefully considered potential transition costs and had concluded that clarifying the terminology is worthwhile.

A judge member expressed concern that the phrasing “allocated against” (e.g., “if an appeal is dismissed, costs are allocated against the appellant”) did not sound right. A style consultant agreed, saying that the usual expression would be “allocated to.” Professor Hartnett responded that “against” is in the existing language (e.g., “costs are taxed against the appellant”), and he explained that the advisory committee wanted to make clear who is on the hook to pay. Allocating something “to” someone might suggest that that person is receiving money rather than having to pay it. Judge Bybee agreed, and he suggested that if the public comments push back against the phrasing, the advisory committee could look for an alternative.

Upon motion by a member, seconded by another, and without opposition: The Standing Committee gave approval to publish the proposed amendment to Rule 39 for public comment.

Amendment to Rule 6 (Appeal in a Bankruptcy Case). Judge Bybee introduced this item. The advisory committee sought approval to publish this proposed amendment for public comment. The proposed amendment appeared starting at page 128 of the agenda book.

Judge Bybee explained that appeals from the bankruptcy court generally go either to the district court or to the bankruptcy appellate panel (“BAP”) in those circuits that have established one. But under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2), a party may instead petition for direct review by the court of appeals.

Judge Bybee turned first to the proposed amendment to Rule 6(a), governing direct appeals from a district court exercising original jurisdiction in a bankruptcy matter. He drew attention to an important difference between bankruptcy appeals practice and ordinary civil appeals practice – namely, that the bankruptcy rules set a markedly shorter deadline (14 days instead of 28 days) for certain postjudgment motions that reset the appeal time. The proposed amendment to Rule 6(a) provides fair warning that the bankruptcy rules govern. The proposed committee note also provides a chart setting out relevant Bankruptcy Rules and applicable motion deadlines.

Judge Bybee next highlighted the proposed amendment to Rule 6(c), which governs permissive direct appeals from the bankruptcy court to the court of appeals under 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2). Alluding to the fact that current Rule 6(c)(1) renders most of Rule 5 applicable to such appeals, Judge Bybee stated that Rule 5 did not fit this context very well. Instead, the advisory committee proposes amending Rule 6(c) to address petitions for review in the court of appeals. The changes are fairly extensive. The advisory committee had a subcommittee with specialists in bankruptcy appellate work who have carefully reviewed the proposal.

The representatives of the Bankruptcy Rules Committee said that they supported the proposal.

Professor Struve thought the proposal would helpfully address some real difficulties and complexities. She thanked the Appellate Rules Committee chair and reporter and also their colleagues on the Bankruptcy Rules Committee for their superb work. Judge Bates echoed that sentiment.

Judge Bates asked why the proposed amendments would change “bankruptcy case” to “bankruptcy case or proceeding” and whether that change should be explained in the committee note. Professor Hartnett responded that the advisory committee wanted to ensure that the rule would cover appeals from both bankruptcy cases and adversary proceedings within those cases.

He suggested that the proposed committee note’s reference to “clarifying changes” encompassed this feature of the proposed amendments.

Judge Bates then asked whether the phrase “motions under the applicable Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure” in proposed Rule 6(a) should say “Rules” because motions may be made under more than one rule. Professor Hartnett deferred to the style consultants on that, and the change was made.

An academic member asked whether the advisory committee had discussed and decided to endorse the First Circuit’s position in In re Lac-Mégantic Train Derailment Litigation, 999 F.3d 72, 83 (1st Cir. 2021) (holding that “the Bankruptcy Rules”—including their shorter postjudgment motion deadlines and the implications of those deadlines for resetting appeal time—“apply to non-core, ‘related to’ cases adjudicated in federal district courts under section 1334(b)’s ‘related to’ jurisdiction”). Professor Hartnett responded that, leaving aside whether that case was correctly decided under the current rules, the advisory committee had been informed by bankruptcy specialists that the First Circuit reached the right outcome, so the advisory committee wanted to make that position explicit in the rule going forward.

Professor Hartnett noted one edit: in the committee note to subdivision (b), removing “(D)” in the sentence “Stylistic changes are made to subdivision (b)(2)(D),” on page 90, line 209, of the agenda book.

Upon motion by a member, seconded by another, and without opposition: The Standing Committee gave approval to publish the proposed amendment to Rule 6 for public comment with the above-noted changes to the text of subdivision (a) (“Rules”) and the committee note to subdivision (b).

Amicus Disclosures. Judge Bybee reported on this item. The advisory committee again sought advice from the Standing Committee. The feedback received at the Standing Committee’s January 2023 meeting was helpful. The proposal was still a working draft and not yet ready for the Standing Committee’s full consideration.

On behalf of the advisory committee, Judge Bybee posed two questions for the Standing Committee. The first question related to draft Rule 29(b)(4) on page 99 of the agenda book. The draft rule required disclosure of any party, counsel, or combination of parties and counsel who contributed 25% or more of the gross annual revenue of an amicus filer in the prior 12-month period. At the January discussion, the Standing Committee asked whether the advisory committee should use a lookback period of the last 12-month period or the prior calendar year. Contrary to what appeared to be the Standing Committee’s sentiments in January, the advisory committee believed that the prior 12-month lookback period works better because, although using the calendar year would be easier, disclosure could also be more easily avoided using a calendar year.

The second question related to draft Rule 29(d), governing disclosure of relationships between nonparties and an amicus filer. The advisory committee drafted two alternatives, labeled alpha and beta. Option alpha would require an amicus to disclose a contribution by anyone, including a member of an amicus organization, of over $10,000 that was earmarked for the preparation of an amicus brief. Option beta would carry forward the existing rule, which requires disclosure of a contribution of earmarked funds but exempts contributions by members of the amicus. The thinking behind option alpha is that option beta makes it too easy to evade disclosure—someone who wants to fund an amicus brief need only become a member of the amicus group. In exchange, the floor for requiring disclosure of a contribution is increased to $10,000 under option alpha. That amount avoids requiring disclosure for a brief crowd-funded by many small contributions.

A practitioner member supported the advisory committee's rationale for the 12-month lookback period. The member also suggested that another option might be to require disclosure of contributions made either in the year the brief is filed or the year immediately prior. That way, the amicus could look at annual figures instead of having to create a new lookback window for each brief. Judge Bates asked whether that proposal would make the process of checking and making disclosures overly complicated. Professors Beale and Hartnett raised the question of what the right denominator for calculating the fraction of revenue contributed would be. Professor Bartell suggested using the entire period beginning January 1 of the calendar year before the date of filing.

A judge member preferred option alpha because option beta allowed someone to join an amicus and make a substantial contribution without disclosure being required.

Another judge member wondered whether trade associations keep clear demarcations of funds that are going to amicus work as opposed to general activities and how a donor would know to which of those uses its donations were directed. The member also thought that $10,000 in option alpha was a very high number. The member could understand not wanting to capture small amounts from crowdfunding, but why not a $5,000 or $7,500 floor?

On the first point, Professor Hartnett responded that the subdivision (b)(4) exception hinged more on the phrase "received in the form of investments or in commercial transactions in the ordinary course of business" than on the phrase "unrelated to the amicus curiae's amicus activities." A trade association's members' contributions are not generally thought of as investments or commercial transactions in the ordinary course of business.

As to the second point, the advisory committee had not settled on $10,000—that amount was set forth in brackets, along with $1,000 as another bracketed alternative. Advisory committee members who supported using $10,000 argued that, once the contribution reaches that number, the contributor is very likely to be driving the effort or at least to have a significant hand in it. Instead of funding coming from a broad membership base, it is coming from a small number of people who may not be representative of the entire membership. Some alternatives, such as a percentage of the cost of the brief, were also considered, but they were considered too difficult to implement.

The judge member again indicated a preference for a lower floor, something like $5,000 or $7,500, in case a small number of entities are pooling resources to be a collective driving force behind the brief. The member was also unsure what counted as a commercial transaction in the ordinary course of business. Funds could go into an entity, on a routine basis, to fund all of its activities, including the activities of its general counsel. The member was concerned that there would not be an administrable distinction between money to fund an amicus brief and money to fund the amicus's legal office.

Judge Bates remarked that the goal should be a rule that is clear to those subject to it. If it is unclear what funds do or do not trigger disclosure, the advisory committee should continue to talk about that.

A practitioner member thought that over-regulation of this area would be a big mistake. The committee seemed to be bringing into the realm of amicus briefs concepts that applied instead to lobbying a legislature. The best form of amicus-brief regulation is the discretion of Article III judges to read them or not read them. The advisory committee also ought to talk with at least the big trade associations to see whether the proposed requirements are feasible and how complicated it would be to implement them. And the proposed requirements will hurt smaller organizations.

The member asserted that proposed Rules 29(d) and (e) were a mistake. For example, lawyers who write amicus briefs for big trade associations do so for free or for a discounted amount—say, $5,000, $10,000, or maybe $20,000. They work on these briefs to be able to say that their work influenced a Supreme Court decision.

Judge Bybee asked the member to clarify whether the member was opposed to the beta alternative version of Rule 29(d), which tracked what is already in the current rule. The member responded that it was fine if it was already there, but the member would not try to set dollar or percentage thresholds.

Another practitioner member argued that proposed (b)(4) addressed a real concern—that is, situations in which big players in an amicus control its filings. As to the exception in proposed (b)(4), the member read it to exclude ordinary commercial transactions between the trade association and its members, such as renting space. If that reading is wrong, the member would view that as a problem.

As to (d), the practitioner member thought option alpha was both over- and underinclusive. A big problem with alpha was that it permitted nonmembers to contribute anything below $10,000 without triggering disclosure. The member thought that the concern was about background players who orchestrate large amicus campaigns by donating to many different organizations. The key control existing today (and in option beta) is that the organization can be seen as credibly speaking for its members—if a nonmember makes a contribution, the nonmember has to be disclosed.

The practitioner member said, though, that he is skeptical of tying disclosure requirements to contributions that are earmarked for a particular brief. Large organizations with large budgets will allocate a portion of annual dues to amicus briefs in general; no funds will ever be targeted to a single brief, so no disclosure will need to be made. Smaller groups or groups that do not regularly file amicus briefs probably will not have an allocation for those briefs in their budgets. If a case comes along that is important to them, they will have to “pass the hat” among their members, and they will have to disclose. So the rule’s burden then falls disproportionately on different amicus groups. For many companies, disclosure will mean they will not contribute because they will not want to be singled out; and amici will be less willing to file if they will have to make a disclosure because they will believe disclosure will make the brief seem less credible. If the concern is with those who join just before or after contributing, perhaps the rule should expressly target that behavior.

Judge Bybee asked what contribution floor this practitioner member favored for option alpha. The member did not think crowdfunding was such a big issue, so the member suggested perhaps a $10 floor. Amicus briefs are not big profit centers, so they often do not cost that much. If the limit is $7,500, then four contributors who give $7,400 each can provide close to what the brief will cost without triggering disclosure. The contributors need not have anything to do at all with the amici, and that seems to be a problem. This member preferred option beta over option alpha.

A judge member remarked that the underlying concern is the opportunistic arrival of somebody who wants to control or have a voice in a particular case. Although having a set dollar amount might be attractive because it's arguably objective, the member did not know that it would address the concern.

Another judge member stressed the need for clarity, expressed doubt about how to apply a disclosure standard that hinges on the intent behind a contribution, and stated that requiring disclosure of an amicus's membership raises First Amendment issues. This member favored option beta.

Another judge member noted that in the courts of appeals, where amicus briefs are less common, those briefs may be more influential than they are in the Supreme Court. Anecdotally, amici can be very important and influential; this member reads amicus briefs. The member stressed once again that the committee should consider a lower dollar-amount threshold in option alpha. Another important reason to know about who is behind the brief is for recusal reasons—to ensure that a party for whom a judge should not decide cases does not come to the court through a third party instead. Asked for a preference between options alpha and beta, the member preferred option alpha because there needs to be an understanding of who is really driving amicus briefs; the member acknowledged the need for careful drafting of option alpha given, inter alia, potential First Amendment concerns. The member separately reiterated doubts about the meaning of the exception in proposed paragraph (b)(4).

Another judge member agreed that it was not clear what the exception in (b)(4) meant or how it would be calculated. That member also did not think that the courts of appeals were expressing a need for a change to Rule 29. The member has not sensed any problem with amicus briefs. Some members of Congress appear to be concerned about undisclosed backers funding multiple amicus briefs. By contrast, the problem that the member, as a judge, would be worried about is whether an amicus was merely another voice for a party in the case. The portion of the existing rule that would become proposed paragraph (b)(1) is aimed at the latter problem. Subdivision (d) instead tries to get at the concern voiced by the members of Congress. To solve that problem (and this member was not sure it was a problem in the courts of appeals), the existing language may be inadequate because it is limited to those who contribute or pledge money intended to fund the particular brief, as opposed to amicus briefs generally. Someone could set up arrangements so as not to pay for any particular brief; instead, they could just fund several organizations that file amicus briefs in dozens of cases. The member was not sure how best to address the concern voiced by the legislators.

Judge Bybee thanked the Standing Committee for its helpful input on these difficult problems.

Intervention on Appeal. Judge Bybee reported that the advisory committee will consider whether to add a new rule governing intervention on appeal. There currently is no rule, but the issue has come up several times in the courts of appeals. The issue was also recently briefed in the Supreme Court in a case that later became moot.

REPORT OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON BANKRUPTCY RULES

Judge Rebecca Connelly and Professors Elizabeth Gibson and Laura Bartell presented the report of the Advisory Committee on Bankruptcy Rules, which last met in West Palm Beach, Florida, on March 30, 2023. The advisory committee presented eight action items and four information items. The advisory committee’s report and the draft minutes of its last meeting were included in the agenda book beginning at page 179.

Action Items

The Restyled Bankruptcy Rules. Judge Connelly introduced this item, and Professor Bartell reported on it. The advisory committee sought final approval of the fully restyled bankruptcy rules, which appeared starting on page 190 of the agenda book.

The restyling project had been an immense effort by the Restyling Subcommittee (chaired by Judge Marcia Krieger), the style consultants, and Rules Committee Staff. The total number of bankruptcy rules exceeded that of all the civil, appellate, criminal, and part of the evidence rules, combined. It was a major project.

Parts VII through IX of the restyled bankruptcy rules were published for public comment in August 2022. There were five sets of comments. The comments and any changes made since publication were shown in the agenda book starting on page 429.

The advisory committee was also asking for approval of Parts I through VI of the restyled rules. The Standing Committee had approved them already over the past two years with the understanding that the rules would return for approval after the entire restyling was completed.

There have been some modifications to the restyled Parts I through VI since those approvals were given. Some of the bankruptcy rules have been substantively amended since then, and the restyled rules now reflect those amendments. The style consultants also did a “top-to-bottom” review of all the rules, making additional stylistic and conforming changes. And the Restyling Committee also made corrections and minor changes.

The advisory committee did not believe that any of these updates to the proposed restyled Parts I through VI were substantive enough to warrant republication for public comment.

Judge Bates commented that the restyling project reflected a monumental collaborative effort by past and present members of the advisory committee, the leadership of the advisory committee and its Restyling Subcommittee, and the reporters and the style consultants on a sometimes-thankless yet important task.

Professor Kimble added that this is the fifth set of restyled rules over 30 years. The rules committees are done with comprehensive restyling, and that is cause for celebration.

Professor Garner noted that this is probably the most ambitious project in law reform and legal drafting that a rulemaking body like the Standing Committee had undertaken in the past 30 years. He noted that the late Judge Robert E. Keeton should be remembered for starting the restyling project in 1991–92. This could be the culmination of his ambition to see simpler, more straightforward rules.

An academic member commented that, as a prior reporter to the Bankruptcy Rules Committee, he participated in a minor restyling of the Part VIII rules. On account of that experience, he had dreaded the prospect of a complete restyling of the rules, and he wanted to congratulate everyone involved with this process. It went more smoothly than anyone could reasonably have hoped, so it really is a cause for celebration.

Upon motion by a member, seconded by another, and without opposition: The Standing Committee approved the restyled bankruptcy rules.

Amendment to Rule 1007 (Lists, Schedules, Statements, and Other Documents; Time to File), Conforming Amendments to Rules 4004, 5009, and 9006, and Abrogation of Form 423. Judge Connelly reported on this item. The advisory committee sought final approval of these proposed amendments, which appeared on pages 687–95 and 703–05 of the agenda book, and the accompanying form abrogation.

Rule 1007 sets deadlines for filing items in bankruptcy court. The change pertains to a requirement for individual debtors in Chapter 7 and Chapter 13 cases. To receive a discharge, a debtor must complete a course in personal financial management. The current Rule 1007 provides a deadline for the debtor to file a statement on an official form (Form 423) that describes the completion of the course. The proposed amendment would instead require that the course provider’s certificate of course completion be filed.

Rules 4004, 5009, and 9006 would all need to be changed because they refer to a “statement” of completion, and they would need to refer to a “certificate” of completion. Further, Official Form 423 would be abrogated because it would no longer serve a purpose.

Professor Bartell noted that the provider of the course furnishes the certificate of course completion. Many of the course providers actually file the certificates directly with the court. But if a provider does not, then the debtor would have to file it instead. The advisory committee received no public comments on this set of proposed amendments.

Upon motion by a member, seconded by another, and without opposition: The Standing Committee approved the proposed amendments to Rules 1007, 4004, 5009, and 9006, and the abrogation of Official Form 423.

Amendment to Rule 7001 (Types of Adversary Proceedings). Judge Connelly reported on this item. The advisory committee sought final approval of this proposed amendment, which appeared starting on page 696 of the agenda book.

Rule 7001 lists the types of proceedings that count as adversary proceedings in a bankruptcy case. The amendment would exclude from the list of adversary proceedings actions filed by individual debtors to recover tangible personal property under section 542(a) of the Bankruptcy Code.

This amendment responds to a suggestion by Justice Sotomayor in her concurrence in City of Chicago v. Fulton, 141 S. Ct. 585 (2021). In that case, the Court decided that the automatic stay set by 11 U.S.C. § 362(a)(3) did not prohibit the city’s retention of the motor vehicle of a consumer in a Chapter 13 bankruptcy case. Justice Sotomayor noted that a debtor could use a turnover action to recover such property, and opined that if the problem with bringing a turnover action is the delay and cumbersome nature of doing it as an adversary proceeding under Rule 7001, the rules committee could consider amending the bankruptcy rules. Id. at 594–95 (Sotomayor, J., concurring).

The amendment was published for comment this past year. The advisory committee received only one comment, which supported the amendment.

Upon motion by a member, seconded by another, and without opposition: The Standing Committee approved the proposed amendment to Rule 7001.

New Rule 8023.1 (Substitution of Parties). Judge Connelly reported on this item. The advisory committee sought final approval of this proposed new rule, which appeared starting on page 698 of the agenda book.

Rule 8023.1 would govern the substitution of parties when a bankruptcy case is on appeal to a district court or BAP. It had not been addressed previously in the rules. The rule is modeled after Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 43.

Upon motion by a member, seconded by another, and without opposition: The Standing Committee approved proposed new Rule 8023.1.

Amendment to Official Form 410A (Mortgage Proof of Claim Attachment). Judge Connelly reported on this item. The advisory committee sought final approval of this proposed amendment, which appeared starting on page 706 of the agenda book.

This proposal amends a provision of the attachment for mortgage proofs of claim. The change would require that the principal amount be itemized separately from interest. Currently the form allows them to be combined on one line item, and the amended form would require separate lines. The advisory committee received one comment on the proposed amended form; it made no change to the proposed amendment after considering that comment.

Upon motion by a member, seconded by another, and without opposition: The Standing Committee approved the proposed amendment to Official Form 410A.

Amendment to Rule 3002.1 (Notice Relating to Claims Secured by a Security Interest in the Debtor’s Principal Residence in a Chapter 13 Case). Judge Connelly reported on this item. The advisory committee sought approval to publish this proposed amendment for public comment. The proposed amendment appeared starting on page 709 of the agenda book.

Rule 3002.1 pertains to cases involving individuals who have filed for Chapter 13 bankruptcy. Because of the structure of Chapter 13, mortgage debt is generally not discharged; but Chapter 13 debtors can cure mortgage defaults during the case. Even though a default can be cured, there can be confusion about the accounting of payments during a case and the status of the mortgage claim at the end of the case. That was the impetus behind the rule—to provide more information to the borrower and the lender about the status of mortgage claims in these cases.

Judge Connelly reminded the committee about the proposed amendments to Rule 3002.1 that had been published for comment in 2021. Those proposed amendments would have provided for a mandatory midcase notice issued by the Chapter 13 trustee and would have set a motion procedure for assessing a mortgage's status at the end of a Chapter 13 case. The advisory committee received numerous public comments, and the committee further revised the proposed amendments in response to those comments.

Although the revisions respond to comments submitted during the public-comment process, the advisory committee determined that the changes are significant enough to warrant republication. This is partly because the advisory committee has switched from a mandatory-notice scheme by one party, the Chapter 13 trustee, to optional motion practice throughout the case, by either the debtor or the trustee.

The end-of-case procedure is also changed to address concerns about the consequences for either failing to respond or failing to comply. The consequences are different enough that the committee thought it would benefit from additional public comments and also thought it was important to provide notice of the proposed changes.

Professor Gibson added that the advisory committee's years-long experience with this rule illustrates the value of notice and publication. Two organizations had suggested significant amendments to Rule 3002.1: the National Association of Chapter 13 Trustees and the American Bankruptcy Institute's Commission on Consumer Bankruptcy. Both organizations advocated a midcase assessment of the mortgage's status—the thought being that, if the debtor and the trustee found out then that, according to the creditor, the debtor had fallen behind in mortgage payments, there would be time to cure that before the case was over.

But the comment process revealed a lot of concern with that idea, especially from Chapter 13 trustees. A midcase review may not always be needed; there are other ways to get the information. And different districts handle postfiling mortgage payments differently—the debtor might continue to pay them directly to the mortgagee, or the trustee might make those mortgage payments. In districts with the former procedure, the trustee would not have information about payments made by the debtor. The biggest change is therefore that the midcase review is not mandatory anymore. It can occur at any time during the case, and either the debtor or the trustee can ask for it by motion. The subcommittee feels that these changes have improved the proposed amendments.

A judge member observed that the revised proposal adds a provision for noncompensatory sanctions. When the claim holder does not comply, there were already remedies making the other party whole, including attorney's fees, which would come at a cost to the claim holder. It is not clear why there should also be noncompensatory sanctions. The member also said that, if something more like punitive sanctions were meant, a notice requirement should be considered, as is usually provided by the rules in such situations.

Judge Connelly said that the proposal for noncompensatory damages was in part a response to In re Gravel, 6 F.4th 503 (2d Cir. 2021), which held that current Rule 3002.1 does not authorize punitive sanctions. The new language was intended to clarify that the bankruptcy court could in appropriate circumstances assess noncompensatory damages. Public comment on this provision would be useful.

Professor Gibson added that these are cases where the mortgagees are repeat players and that the failure to comply with the rule in multiple cases might create a need for declaratory, injunctive, and punitive relief to address the problem. Another judge member stated, however, that punitive relief seems qualitatively different from declaratory and injunctive relief. Notice should be required before imposing punitive relief, and consideration should be given to the scope and framework for such relief. Judge Connelly responded that the rule reflects the approach taken in Civil Rule 37, and stressed the need for judges to be able to address willful noncompliance with court orders. The judge member suggested the value of seeking comment specifically on whether notice should be required before an award of punitive fines.

On the issue of prior notice, Professor Gibson raised the possibility of prefacing the provision with “if, after notice and a reasonable opportunity to respond,” which Rule 11 uses. Although this would not spell out all the procedure, Professor Gibson did not think the rule needed to do so. Professor Struve quoted Rule 3002.1(h)—“If the claim holder fails to provide any information as required by this rule, the court may, after notice and a hearing, do one or more of the following:”—which is followed by paragraph (h)(2). She wondered if this provision addressed the concern with notice.

A judge member thought it did address the notice issue but that it did not explain the need for the punitive sanction. If a mortgage holder was noncompliant, couldn't it end up not only paying attorney fees but also taking a haircut on its claim? Judge Connelly responded that there would not be a haircut on the claim, because the mortgage would survive the discharge. The member rejoined that proposed (h)(1) authorizes precluding the claim holder from presenting information that should have been produced, and argued that this could affect the claim. Judge Connelly responded that the rule would prevent the claim holder from presenting the omitted information as a form of evidence in a contested matter or an adversary proceeding in the bankruptcy case, but that is different from making the debt unenforceable after the case ends. Although the claim holder might not be able to present the evidence in the bankruptcy case the rule would not prevent use of the evidence in state-court foreclosure proceedings.

A judge member stressed that adequate notice would require specific mention of punitive relief if that was under contemplation. “Noncompensatory sanctions,” this member suggested, was unduly vague. Judge Bates asked what was contemplated by “noncompensatory sanctions” beyond declaratory and injunctive relief. Professor Gibson and Judge Connelly responded that it would include punitive damages payable to a party.

As to rules that authorize noncompensatory sanctions, Professor Gibson suggested, for example, that under Civil Rule 11 a lawyer could be required to attend continuing legal education.

A practitioner member read the text of Civil Rule 11(c)(4) and pointed out that payments to a party under that rule seemed to be limited to reasonable attorney’s fees and other expenses; the potential “penalty” contemplated by that rule is paid to the court. The practitioner member further agreed with previous comments that nobody would read “noncompensatory sanctions” to mean equitable relief. If there is a desire that equitable relief be available, it should be spelled out and, as under Civil Rule 11(c)(2), there should be an opportunity to cure.

An academic member offered background about why courts occasionally need “baseball bats” in these cases. This rule goes back to the mortgage crisis in 2007–08. Many people filed for Chapter 13 bankruptcy in large part to save their homes by curing a default on a mortgage in Chapter 13, while also maintaining their ongoing monthly payments. But it was a huge problem to figure out the exact amount owed on the mortgage, and it was extremely difficult to get mortgagees to give that information in a way that could be processed by trustees, debtors, and the courts. Ongoing compliance was also often an issue because there were not deep-pocketed lawyers on the debtor’s side. The Chapter 13 trustee is often, but not always, in the mix, and the court has a huge flow of information that it has to track. The amounts of money in these cases are just not enough, even if clawed back, to get a mortgagee’s attention, so a stronger measure is necessary to get that attention.

A judge member questioned whether, if there is no precedent under Rule 11 for imposing punitive damages payable to another party, there were any authority for a bankruptcy court to impose such a sanction. Does that need to be authorized by Congress? Is it implicit in the statute? Such an award, this member suggested, was not a traditional kind of ancillary relief used to enforce court powers, unlike a fine to the court or contempt.

Another judge member suggested that Rule 11 could provide a model for potential language—perhaps “reasonable expenses and attorney’s fees caused by the failure, nonmonetary directives, and, in appropriate circumstances, an order to pay a penalty into court.” (A practitioner member later made a similar suggestion.)

Judge Bates remarked that there is nothing in the committee note that explains what “noncompensatory sanctions” means or how declaratory or injunctive relief fits into the scheme. After looking at Rule 11, which is much more elaborate in terms of certain requirements than this rule would be, he wondered whether more thought needed to be given to it.

Judge Connelly explained that the proposed amendment responded to the Gravel opinion. The idea was to allow the bankruptcy court to award something beyond attorney’s fees. The advisory committee did not specify what that would be—the language “noncompensatory sanctions” was meant to be general. Judge Connelly agreed that there should be something in the committee note about that language.

After further discussion, Judge Connelly asked whether, if the language “in appropriate circumstances, noncompensatory sanctions” were removed, the Standing Committee would give approval to publish the rest of the rule. Professor Gibson said she would prefer to go forward without the change to (h)(2) because the rest of this amendment is important. Deferring a vote on the rest of the rule would delay those changes for another year.

Professor Capra remarked that the approval is only for public comment. He further suggested that, in the future, the advisory committee say “award other appropriate relief,” period, and then add all the explanation in the committee note. The Standing Committee even has the authority to put the language in brackets and then invite comments on it.

A judge member expressed support for shortening the provision to “award other appropriate relief.” Professor Bartell expressed concern that if the “including” clause is removed, an unintended negative inference is created that other appropriate relief no longer includes an award of expenses and attorney’s fees. Judge Bates expressed concern about whether this suggestion could increase the likelihood of needing to republish again later.

A practitioner member thought it seemed riskier to take out (h)(2) and not make it an issue if the Standing Committee would still have to discuss it again in six months. Having public comment helps the committees improve the rule. Also, in approving something for publication, the Standing Committee does not necessarily give that same language approval. It is worth seeing what the reaction to it would be. A judge member demurred to that suggestion, arguing that a proposal should not be sent out for comment if the committee knows it could not accept that proposal as drafted.

Professor Hartnett asked whether, if the advisory committee had in mind Civil Rule 37, the rule could cross-reference Bankruptcy Rule 7037. For example, “any of the sanctions permissible under Rule 7037.” Professor Gibson responded that some of the sanctions under Rule 37 would not be applicable here; she would be reluctant to have only a general reference to Rule 7037. Professor Hartnett said that he thought “appropriate circumstances” might cover that problem.

Professor Cooper asked whether it would work to publish the rule as proposed and specifically invite comment on the issue. Judge Bates asked what risks would be involved with that approach and whether it would lessen the risk of having to do any republication. Professor Gibson thought it would lessen the likelihood of coming back with another amendment. Judge Bates thought that that approach would give the impression the Standing Committee has approved that language, and he did not have the sense that the Standing Committee is prepared to give approval to that language.

Professor Coquillette noted that, in the past, there has been concern when the Standing Committee permits publication of something that it really would not ultimately approve. The harm is that people might wonder about the rules process. Simply putting something out to attract comment when the committee really will not do it is not a good idea. It is different if there is a real possibility that reading the comments during the comment period could convince the committee to approve the proposal.

Professor Struve agreed with Professor Gibson that, leaving aside (h), the rest of the rule seemed likely to provide significant benefit to a population that is a concern for the whole bankruptcy structure. That benefit has already been delayed past one publication cycle. She also agreed with those who said it would be peculiar to send something out for comment that the Standing Committee could not see a way to approve. She also saw the point about flagging that a piece of the rule may be subject to change in the future; but she was not sure that sending out the proposal currently in the agenda book could avoid the need for republication in the event that the process ends up putting forward some very different proposal. It might be cleaner, if the Standing Committee agrees that there is a strong normative case for doing so, to publish the rest of the rule without (h).

An academic member remarked that, although the Standing Committee is historically reluctant to change a rule and then immediately afterward publish an additional change, doing so in this case may not pose a serious problem because the sanctions piece is separable. And it would show that the rules process takes seriously concerns about authority, notice, and operation.

Professor Gibson noted that there was relatively little discussion by the advisory committee of (h)(2) as opposed to the rest of this rule. So the advisory committee would likely be satisfied with that outcome.

Judge Bates asked whether a change to the committee note would be needed as well because the note refers to (h)(2). Professor Gibson answered in the affirmative. A judge member asked whether it is typical or permissible to issue a committee note on a provision without amending the provision's text. The judge member wondered if the advisory committee could issue a committee note that "other appropriate relief" should be interpreted broadly to include more than just attorney's fees, instead of adding "noncompensatory sanctions" to the text. Professor Gibson responded that a change to a committee note cannot be made by itself.

A style consultant suggested adding the word "any" before "other appropriate relief" and deleting "and, in appropriate circumstances, noncompensatory sanctions." The committee note would then state that "any" was added to show that the advisory committee did not intend to limit the recovery to reasonable expenses and attorney's fees—a diplomatic way of saying that the amendment was intended to address the Second Circuit's erroneous decision.

Professor Marcus observed that the 2015 committee note to the amendment of Civil Rule 37(e) stated that the amendment rejected certain Second Circuit caselaw.

Judge Bates asked the advisory committee's representatives whether that kind of change would be consistent with what the Bankruptcy Rules Committee decided to do here and whether it would simply ignore the issues raised with respect to what the further relief is, instead letting the courts deal with that. Professor Bartell responded that it would be consistent with the advisory committee's decision and that it would also be consistent with other bankruptcy rules that also call for other appropriate relief upon a violation. Those rules do not say what procedural mechanisms must be adopted to impose that other relief, but that is consistent with how the phrase is treated in other bankruptcy rules. Judge Bates then asked whether there had been discussion of whether punitive damages fell within "other appropriate relief." Professor Bartell said that she had not researched the question, and Judge Connelly said that the advisory committee had not discussed it.

Professor Struve admired the elegance of the proposal to add "any" and a change to the committee note. But she did wonder, if there are instances of "other appropriate relief" sprinkled throughout the bankruptcy rules, whether adding "any" to this one would create an unwanted negative inference. The style consultant responded that the committee note's express statement about why "any" was added would be the reason for the difference. Judge Bates noted that some judges look at only the text of the rules to determine what they mean, not the committee notes—would that lead to a possible view that they have two different meanings?

A judge member commented that, if the committee note only disapproves of the In re Gravel decision, it is not clear what the note actually does. If the note is going to say that certain actions are authorized, the member would want to know what those actions are. Judge Bates agreed that a vague committee note that does not say expressly what the amendment authorizes would lead to divergent comments that the advisory committee would ultimately have to resolve.

A judge member was leery of making any substantive changes or hints right now. Normally in the rules process, this would have been a proposal, and then the Standing Committee would give feedback to the advisory committee. People would have talked about Civil Rules 11 and 37. If there is a Rules Enabling Act obstacle to creating a punitive damage remedy, that would have been discussed. But all of that was skipped because of how this issue, through no one's fault, has arisen. The member would rather hold off six months or a year and then deal with this issue separately rather than today without any preparation.

Another judge member agreed and added that, depending on what the scope of the relief under paragraph (h)(2) is, there may be a need to change the procedural protections. Just changing a word is not going to deal with the problem.

Judge Connelly thanked the Standing Committee for the helpful discussion. The proposed changes to Rule 3002.1 apart from proposed subdivision (h)(2) create a new, necessary, and beneficial mechanism, one in which there has been an interest for a while. Seeking republication of those provisions, excepting those in paragraph (h)(2), is warranted now. Given the comments today, it would be more appropriate to return to the advisory committee for more robust, thorough evaluation of Rule 3002.1(h)(2). It is unclear whether that will result in a proposed amendment at some point. An amendment may even be premature in light of the developing caselaw.

A member moved to approve the proposed amendment, without the proposed changes to paragraph (h)(2), for publication, and another member seconded the motion. Judge Bates opened the floor to further discussion.

Professor Struve asked whether, despite omitting the proposed changes to paragraph (h)(2), the semicolon and word “and” at the end of paragraph (h)(2) would remain. Judge Connelly answered that, yes, the semicolon and “and” would remain.

An academic member encouraged the committee members to read the Second Circuit's In re Gravel case, both the majority opinion and the dissent (with which the member agreed). As far as the member knew, that is the first appellate decision with that particular holding. The member also thought the committee members should congratulate themselves because the rules process was working well. The Gravel decision was driven in part by Taggart v. Lorenzen, 139 S. Ct. 1795 (2019), which potentially destabilized a bankruptcy court's ability to enter sanctions. It would be appropriate to give greater and deeper thought to Taggart's implications when considering a potential sanctions regime.

After further discussion it was clarified that the committee note would be modified by deleting the third sentence in the last paragraph—“It also expressly states that noncompensatory sanctions may be awarded in appropriate circumstances.”

Upon a show of hands, with no members voting in the negative: The Standing Committee gave approval to republish the proposed amendment to Rule 3002.1 for public comment with the following changes: No amendments to (h)(2) were retained, except for adding a semicolon and the word “and” at the end; and the third sentence in the last paragraph of the committee note was struck.

Amendment to Rule 8006(g) (Request for Leave to Take a Direct Appeal to a Court of Appeals After Certification). Judge Connelly reported on this item. The advisory committee sought approval to publish this proposed amendment for public comment. The proposed amendment appeared on page 728 of the agenda book.

The proposed amendment would amend subdivision (g) so as to dovetail with the proposed amendments to Appellate Rule 6(c) approved for publication for public comment earlier in the meeting.

Upon motion by a member, seconded by another, and without opposition: The Standing Committee gave approval to publish the proposed amendment to Rule 8006(g) for public comment.

Official Forms Related to Rule 3002.1. Judge Connelly reported on this item. The advisory committee sought approval to publish these proposed official forms for public comment. The proposed official forms appeared starting on page 729 of the agenda book.

Official Forms 410C13-M1, 410C13-M1R, 410C13-N, 410C13-NR, 410C13-M2, and 410C13-M2R are the companion official forms to proposed amended Rule 3002.1. None of these forms was affected by the decision (described above) to withdraw the request to publish the Rule 3002.1(h)(2) proposal.

Upon motion by a member, seconded by another, and without opposition: The Standing Committee gave approval to publish the proposed Official Forms 410C13-M1, 410C13-M1R, 410C13-N, 410C13-NR, 410C13-M2, and 410C13-M2R for public comment.

Suggestion to Require Complete Redaction of Social Security Numbers from Filed Documents. Professor Bartell reported on this item.

Senator Ron Wyden of Oregon sent a letter to the Chief Justice of the United States in August 2022, in which he suggested that federal-court filings should be scrubbed of personal information before they are publicly available. Portions of the letter suggested that the rules committees reconsider a proposal to redact entire Social Security numbers from court filings.

The Bankruptcy Code requires that Social Security numbers be included on certain documents either in whole or only partially redacted. See §§ 110, 342(c)(1). The advisory committee cannot change those requirements because they are statutory, but there may be some circumstances where full redaction is possible and appropriate.

But the Advisory Committee has become aware that the Judicial Conference’s Committee on Court Administration and Case Management (“CACM”) has asked the FJC to design and conduct studies regarding the inclusion of certain sensitive personal information in court filings. Those studies would update the privacy study issued by the FJC in 2015. They would gather information about compliance with privacy rules and the inclusion of unredacted Social Security numbers in court filings. The advisory committee has decided to defer consideration of the suggestion while those new studies are underway.

Suggestion to Adopt a National Rule Addressing Debtors’ Electronic Signatures.
Professor Gibson reported on this item.

An attorney suggested the adoption of a national rule to allow debtors to sign petitions and schedules electronically without requiring their attorneys to retain the original documents with wet signatures.

But only a year ago, in its Spring 2022 meeting, the advisory committee decided not to take further action on a suggestion by CACM to consider a national rule on electronic signatures of non-CM/ECF users. The advisory committee decided then that a period of experience under local rules addressing e-signatures would help inform any national rule, and it reasoned that e-signature technology would also probably develop and improve in the meantime.

In light of that recent decision, the advisory committee decided to defer further consideration of this suggestion to a later date. Nothing has changed since a year ago. Also, the project on electronic filing by self-represented litigants may also have implications for the e-signature issue.

Suggestions Regarding the Required Course on Personal Financial Management.
Professor Gibson reported on this item.

The advisory committee continues to consider suggestions concerning the course on personal financial management discussed earlier.

Professor Bartell’s research has shown that, in a single year, thousands of debtors’ cases were closed without a discharge because of the debtors’ failure to file proof that they have taken this course. Debtors in that situation have to pay to reopen their cases to file the certificates. The Consumer Subcommittee has been considering whether and how the rules might be amended to decrease that number.

One question is whether to change the deadlines for the filing of those forms—now certificates of completion—or perhaps to require simply that they be filed by the point at which the court rules on discharge. There is also a rule that requires the court to remind debtors of this requirement if they haven’t filed it within 45 days after the petition. Another question is whether the date for that notice reminder should be changed or whether more than one notice should be given.

Proposed Amendment to Rule 1007(h) to Require Disclosure of Postpetition Assets. Professor Gibson reported on this item.

The advisory committee continues to consider requirements to disclose assets acquired after a petition is filed in an individual Chapter 11 case or in a Chapter 12 or 13 case. In such cases, which may last several years, the Bankruptcy Code specifies that the property acquired by the debtor during that period is property of the estate.

The current rule requires filing a supplemental schedule for only certain postpetition assets obtained within 180 days after filing the petition. Judge Catherine McEwen, a member of the advisory committee, suggested an amendment to cover all postpetition property in individual Chapter 11, Chapter 12, and Chapter 13 cases.

The Consumer Subcommittee thought that one of the problems with such a rule is how to capture what property needs to be disclosed. It would be impossible to report everything that comes into a debtor's ownership over a three-to-five-year period. Should the rule mandate disclosing only certain types of property, such as only property that has a substantial impact on the estate? Also, courts that currently impose a disclosure requirement by local rule do so in different ways, so there is a lack of uniformity.

The Consumer Subcommittee was not sure there was a problem that needed to be solved. The issue was further discussed at the advisory committee meeting. There, Judge McEwen noted that the Eleventh Circuit has strong case law about judicial estoppel when a debtor has not revealed property in the bankruptcy case. Debtors can lose the right to pursue an undisclosed claim, such as a tort action based on a postpetition injury, and creditors can lose the benefit of such claims. By requiring disclosure, that problem could be avoided. So the advisory committee asked the subcommittee to consider the matter further.

REPORT OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON CIVIL RULES

Judge Robin Rosenberg and Professors Richard Marcus, Andrew Bradt, and Edward Cooper presented the report of the Advisory Committee on Civil Rules, which last met in West Palm Beach, Florida, on March 28, 2023. The Advisory Committee presented three action items and several information items. The Advisory Committee's report and the draft minutes of its last meeting were included in the agenda book beginning at page 784.

Action Items

Amendment to Rule 12(a) (Time to Serve a Responsive Pleading). Judge Rosenberg reported on this item. The advisory committee sought final approval of this proposed amendment, which appeared starting on page 826 of the agenda book.

The amendment makes clear that the times to serve a responsive pleading set by Rules 12(a)(2)–(3) are superseded by a federal statute that specifies another time. It came about because some litigants in Freedom of Information Act cases had difficulty obtaining summonses that called for responsive pleadings within the statute's 30-day deadline; without the amendment, it was not clear if a statute prescribing a different time would apply to the United States under this rule.

Upon motion by a member, seconded by another, and without opposition: The Standing Committee approved the proposed amendment to Rule 12(a).

Amendments to Rules 16(b)(3) (Scheduling and Management) and 26(f)(3) (Discovery Plan) Related to Privilege Logs. Judge Rosenberg reported on this item. The advisory committee sought approval to publish these proposed amendments for public comment. The proposed amendments appeared starting on pages 828 and 846 of the agenda book.

These amendments deal with the privilege-log problem and address early in the case how the parties will comply with the requirements of Rule 26(b)(5)(A). The goal is to get the parties to address issues pertaining to privilege logs during their Rule 26(f) conference, in order to reduce burdens while still providing sufficient information about documents being withheld and to reduce the number of unexpected problems at the end of discovery.

The proposed amendments were presented for approval for publication at the Standing Committee's January 2023 meeting. There were concerns about the committee notes' length, so the advisory committee took the amendments back for further consideration. The notes are now half as long.

Upon motion by a member, seconded by another, and without opposition: The Standing Committee gave approval to publish for public comment the proposed amendments to Rules 16(b)(3) and 26(f)(3).

New Rule 16.1 (Multidistrict Litigation). Judge Rosenberg reported on this item. The advisory committee sought approval to publish for public comment this proposed new rule, which appeared starting on page 831 of the agenda book.

Since 2017, the Multidistrict Litigation (“MDL”) Subcommittee and the advisory committee have considered whether to propose a rule to govern MDLs. The MDL Subcommittee has heard many times from attorneys in both the plaintiffs’ and defense bars, experienced and first-time transferee judges, and groups including Lawyers for Civil Justice and the American Association for Justice. Judge Rosenberg thanked them for all of the time and meaningful input that they have given the subcommittee. The proposed rule has been well received by all of these groups and was overwhelmingly supported by the transferee judges at the recent transferee-judge conference last fall.

Judge Rosenberg addressed a common question: why is an MDL rule needed? MDLs account for a large portion of the federal docket: 69.8% as of May 2023, up from about 1.3% in 1981. Many judges will be assigned MDLs and will look to the rules for guidance. The Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation is making a concerted effort to expand assignments of MDLs to new judges, and there are more leadership appointments to diverse groups of lawyers. From January 1, 2019, to May 31, 2023, out of 96 new MDLs, 40 went to first-time transferee judges. In 2023 alone, the panel has centralized eight MDLs before eight different judges, six of whom are first-time transferee judges.

The advisory committee and the groups with which it has been working feel it is essential for the court to take an active and informed role early in an MDL proceeding. There are issues that become problematic unless addressed at the outset of the action, particularly in large MDLs.

Transferee judges have also expressed concern that they lack clear, explicit authority for some of the things that they are doing, which most agree are necessary to manage an MDL.

Rule 16 just addresses two-party litigation, and Rule 23 addresses class actions, but we have nothing for MDLs. Managing an MDL is broader than managing a non-MDL proceeding. It is critical for a transferee judge to have a more active management role in an MDL.

The advisory committee used a three-part test to determine whether to go forward with this new rule. First, is there a problem? Yes, there are circumstances in which courts start off on the wrong foot in an MDL and that could cause many problems down the road. Second, is there a rules-based solution? Yes, this proposed rule helps solve the problem by addressing issues early and laying the groundwork for effective case management. Third, would a rules-based solution avoid causing harm? Yes, the advisory committee believes that the proposed rule avoids harm by using the word “should” (with respect to the court’s management of MDLs).

Rule 16.1 focuses the court and the parties on the management issues that can effectively move an MDL forward from an early point, yet the rule recognizes that not all MDLs are alike, that no one size fits all. So the rule is drafted to provide both helpful guidance and flexibility in managing the proceeding.

The advisory committee carefully considered the helpful comments of the Standing Committee at its January 2023 meeting, and many of those comments were incorporated into the revised rule.

In subdivision (a), the advisory committee settled on the word “should”—in most but not all MDLs, the court should schedule an initial management conference. The term “should” indicates that reality, while still providing some flexibility. “Should” has been interpreted as a clear directive in many instances and several of the civil rules already use it.

As for subdivision (b), the advisory committee’s view is that appointing coordinating counsel helps the court get the case moving. The role of coordinating counsel is limited to the initial conference. The rule provides flexibility both to the court, to determine what issues coordinating counsel should address, and to the parties, to inform the court about the case’s status. The advisory committee settled on “may” because an MDL may or may not need coordinating counsel for the initial management conference.

For subdivision (c), the advisory committee chose the first of the two alternatives of the version of Rule 16.1(c) presented at the January 2023 Standing Committee meeting. Most comments preferred this alternative, which lists a cafeteria-style menu of options (reflecting that there is no one-size-fits-all framework for an MDL). It is not a mandatory checklist. Paragraph (c)(1) was modified to say “whether leadership counsel should be appointed” rather than assuming they would be. More specifics were added to the subparagraphs and the committee note to clarify the issues to consider at the initial stages of the MDL. The committee note to paragraph (c)(1)(A) lists factors to consider when selecting leadership counsel. Paragraph (c)(4) was revised in direct response to comments from the Standing Committee about identifying issues, vetting claims, and exchanging information early in the case. Rather than the previous reference to “whether” the parties will exchange information, (c)(4) now refers to “how and when” they will do so. Paragraph (c)(6) (concerning discovery) was modified to eliminate the word “sequencing” and make it more general. Paragraph (c)(9) is newly added. The court can play a significant role in making sure the settlement process is fair and transparent. Rule 16 already authorizes the court to play some role in the process. In paragraph (c)(12), the advisory committee did not include the word “special” with “master.” It recognizes that the court may make decisions and appointments using its inherent authority. The committee note, in its opening paragraph, uses the phrase “just and efficient conduct” in response to a comment from the Standing Committee about directing the parties to adhere to the Rule 1 principles of just, speedy, and inexpensive determinations.

Professor Marcus added that this draft rule is the product of long deliberations, and the advisory committee needs public comment on it. Professor Bradt, as both an outsider and a recent insider to the process of developing the rule, thought it extraordinary how much information and outreach and response from interested parties there has been. He thought it an extensive and admirable process.

A practitioner member expressed continuing concerns about the proposal. The member’s primary concern was with the committee note, which the member felt was doing the rulemaking rather than the rule. The member gave several examples of portions of the committee note that caused the member concern. These included examples of sentences that the member felt could be omitted as superfluous or confusing, language in the note indicating that a single management conference might suffice for a given MDL, a sentence discussing individual-class-member discovery in class actions, and language suggesting that the court may have a right to know about the status of settlement negotiations. The most important issue for the member was the standard for selecting leadership counsel. The committee note to subdivision (c)(1)(A), this member argued, should not require each leadership counsel to responsibly and fairly represent all plaintiffs, because there can be conflicts among the plaintiffs. Further, the criteria should include the number and value of claims that counsel represents in the MDL; when the leadership counsel include those representing the greatest financial interests, that can help avoid a problem with opt-outs.

Another practitioner member countered that the proposed Rule 16.1 fills an important gap. This member, too, could suggest specific changes, but would resist the temptation to do so because the proposed rule was ready for publication. The newer judges and practitioners who are playing important roles in contemporary MDL practice need such a rule, particularly in the absence of an updated version of the Manual for Complex Litigation. This member felt it was useful for the committee note to mention discovery in class actions, because MDLs often encompass class actions. Judge Bates responded that the other member had raised legitimate questions whether the committee note to a rule on MDLs should address discovery in class actions, and also whether the list of criteria for leadership counsel should include the size and number of claims represented.

A judge member stated that the rule is ready for publication. An effort is ongoing to broaden the MDL bench, and training for new judges is important. Professor Coquillette agreed that the rule was ready for publication and he congratulated the advisory committee, though he also expressed concern that committee notes should not try to fill the role of a treatise. Another judge member praised the rule for setting a conceptual framework and focusing on the basics. This member suggested requesting comment on the compensation of counsel. Taken together, this member said, the rule text and committee note might be read to authorize the use of common benefit funds, and there is debate on whether that mechanism can be used in an MDL. Another judge member predicted that the rule would be very helpful but also warned that the committee note would be cited more often than the rule, because the note addresses the most nettlesome issues; if the committee wished to deal with those issues, this member suggested, it should do so in rule text. Judge Bates predicted that the committee would receive disparate comments on the notes' best practices advice, and wondered how it would address those contending viewpoints. Another judge member said that the rule was ready for publication, and it would help to protect district judges from being reversed on appeal, but this member voiced some uneasiness about the committee notes.

Judge Bates commented that the rule's title, "Managing Multidistrict Litigation," promises more than the rule delivers. The rule really concerns just the initial management conference.

The practitioner member who had initially raised several concerns asked to change, in the second paragraph of the committee note to paragraph (c)(1), the phrase "responsibly and fairly represent all plaintiffs" to "adequately represent plaintiffs." In the same paragraph, the member also asked to replace "geographical distributions, and backgrounds" with "geographical distributions, backgrounds, and the size of the financial interests of plaintiffs represented by such counsel." The member further suggested, in the second paragraph of the portion of the committee note to paragraph (c)(4), striking the third sentence (concerning discovery in class actions).

A judge member asked whether the practitioner member's suggested term "adequately" was intended to incorporate adequacy as the term is understood in Rule 23(a)(4)? In doing so, a lot of the class-action case law might implicitly be incorporated. The practitioner member responded that he found the terms "responsibly and fairly" problematic because those words do not appear anywhere else and their meaning is unclear. He also objected to addressing the appointment of leadership counsel in the committee note instead of in rule text. Judge Rosenberg confirmed that the advisory committee stayed away from "adequately" because it did not want there to be confusion with Rule 23.

As to the practitioner member's suggestion that the note to (c)(1) should advise the judge when selecting leadership counsel to keep in mind "the size of the financial interests of plaintiffs represented by ... counsel," Judge Rosenberg noted that the next sentence, beginning with "Courts have considered the nature of the actions and parties," showed that the nature of the actions is contemplated as a factor, though perhaps it is not clear enough for the point being made about the size of the financial interest. She also did not know how a judge would know the size of the plaintiffs' financial interests. An early census might disclose the number of claims represented by someone under consideration for leadership, but would not disclose their size. The practitioner member responded that, in securities cases, it is done all the time for appointing lead counsel at the start of a case. Professor Marcus interjected that securities cases are different. An article by Professor Jill E. Fisch in the Columbia Law Review contrasted them with mass torts in particular. And some of the people attending this meeting had previously urged that it was important not to accept numbers as indicative of valid claims, whatever the size of the claims.

The practitioner member responded that, rather than having rules to deal with all of these difficult issues, the committee is burying those issues in the committee note. These topics are contentious, and the financial interest is a factor that a judge could take into account in a products-liability case or in any other MDL. If one lawyer represents $5 billion in claims and another represents $100 million in claims, and the judge selects as lead counsel the one with $100 million, there will be opt-outs.

Judge Rosenberg still was not clear how a judge would know the financial value. And including language like that could encourage people to simply get lots of claims filed, even nonmeritorious ones, if the word on the street is that, if the judge sees that someone has a lot of dollars and a lot of claims, that person will get leadership. She understood the practitioner member's point and wondered if there were a way to word the committee note to capture it. The language was intended to be comprehensive and to take a lot of factors into account. The closest the committee note got was referring to the nature of the actions—looking at what the applicant for leadership has in the way of actions. Are there a lot of them? Are they high-enough value such that the applicant should be in leadership?

Judge Bates thought this to be a debatable point with merit to each side. There has not yet been a suggestion of language that resolves the debate; public comment may help.

A judge member remarked that mass-tort cases are not the same as securities cases. If a judge goes with the number or value of claims, that will favor those plaintiffs' counsel who have advertiser relationships. In the member's state, in coordinated proceedings in which counsel organize themselves, counsel do not always select as leaders the lawyers with the biggest numbers—they may not be the ones who will make the best presentation on the issues that will decide the case. The member agreed with Judge Rosenberg that relying on claim numbers or value could incentivize putting in massive numbers of cases. Further, a judge may not always know at the beginning who will have the most clients. Sometimes, particularly if there are both a federal and a state MDL, parties wait for the initial rulings to see where they want to file.

Professor Bradt observed that MDLs vary and are fluid. An MDL may be created at different times in a controversy's lifecycle. Sometimes an MDL is created after it is already known who will be involved, and sometimes an MDL is created very early in anticipation of the filing of a lot of future cases. Moreover, one of the things that the rule anticipates is that leadership is also fluid. As the circumstances of the case change, the transferee judge may find it necessary to change the leadership structure. The leadership piece of the rule is capacious in order to account for that.

The practitioner member who had been proposing revisions to the committee note suggested that, if the committee note stopped after paragraph one or paragraph two, the rule would then do what it was intended to do—identify topics for the initial conference. It would be a modest rule, not an attempt to cover the waterfront. But right now, the note is trying to cover the waterfront. Instead, a rule on each one of these topics should be made.

Judge Bates asked the advisory committee's representatives what changes, if any, they would like to adopt before asking the Standing Committee to approve the proposal for publication.

As to the rule's title ("Managing Multidistrict Litigation"), Judge Rosenberg remarked that the advisory committee had gone back and forth. Although the lion's share of the proposed rule is about the initial management, the rule does address later proceedings as well. For example, paragraph (c)(8) speaks of a schedule for additional management conferences with the court. So the advisory committee had stuck with "Managing Multidistrict Litigation" instead of "Initial Management.” A judge member suggested changing the rule’s title to simply “Multidistrict Litigation.” Rule titles usually do not include gerunds. Judge Rosenberg accepted this suggestion on behalf of the advisory committee.

Professor Marcus responded to a previous remark that there is always more than one management conference. He noted that the rule is not a command to have more than one. Paragraph (c)(8) lets the judge order the lawyers to provide a schedule for further management meetings. Subdivision (d) also advises the judge to be more flexible than under Rule 16 in making revisions to the initial management program. Of the two kinds of issues raised about the rule at today’s meeting—smaller wording issues versus more fundamental issues about what should be included in the rule—the wording issues seemed more promising to look at today. Professor Marcus suspected that there would be a long compilation of public comments if the rule were published.

In response to a suggestion by Judge Bates, Judge Rosenberg stated that subdivision (c)’s text would say simply “any matter listed below” rather than “any matter addressed in the list below.”

Professor Marcus agreed with Judge Bates that the reference to Rule 16(b) in the fourth paragraph in the committee note on paragraph (c)(1) should instead be a reference to Rule 16.1(b).

Judge Bates had asked whether paragraph (c)(6) should say “to handle discovery efficiently” instead of “to handle it efficiently”; after discussion with the style consultants, the advisory committee representatives decided not to make that change.

Judge Rosenberg agreed with Judge Bates that “Even if the court has not” in the committee note to paragraph (c)(9) should be changed to “Whether or not the court has.”

A practitioner member asked if the advisory committee wanted to retain (in the second paragraph of the committee note to paragraph (c)(4)) the sentence about discovery from individual class members. Another practitioner member supported deleting that sentence because it concerned class actions, not MDLs. The practitioner member who had previously expressed support for keeping the sentence suggested that the problem with the sentence was its statement that “it is widely agreed” that such discovery is often inappropriate. There is nothing in Rule 23 law about this, but there is a lot of caselaw. This member suggested that perhaps better language would be, “For example, it may be contended that discovery from individual class members is inappropriate in particular class actions.” An academic member questioned why the example should be included in the note. Whether it is accurate or not, it may be better to take it out or find another example. The practitioner member responded that it comes up in hybrid class MDLs in which there are both class actions and individual claims arising from the same product or course of conduct. The example is a way of reminding courts that they may be dealing with different standards, issues, terminology, and decisions based on whether they are dealing with the individual component or the class component of an MDL.

A practitioner member again raised the question whether all leadership counsel must responsibly and fairly represent all plaintiffs. Another practitioner member responded that it might be wiser to say that they will fairly and reasonably represent the plaintiffs or the group of plaintiffs they are appointed to represent. The reason there are diverse leadership groups in MDLs is that some will represent class plaintiffs, for example, while others will represent a particular type of claim. “All” plaintiffs may be too literal.

Judge Rosenberg agreed that the proposed committee note should be modified to remove the word “all” in the phrase “responsibly and fairly represent all plaintiffs” in the second paragraph of the committee note to paragraph (c)(1). She also agreed that the second paragraph of the committee note to paragraph (c)(4) should be modified to remove the sentence about class-member discovery.

Upon motion by a member, seconded by another, and without opposition: The Standing Committee gave approval to publish the proposed new Rule 16.1 for public comment with one change to the title of the proposed rule (striking “Managing”), one change to the text of subdivision (c) (replacing “any matter addressed in the list below” with “any matter listed below”), and the following changes to the committee note as printed in the agenda book:

- In the second paragraph of the note to paragraph (c)(1), “all” was struck from the phrase “responsibly and fairly represent all plaintiffs.”
- In the fourth paragraph of the note to paragraph (c)(1), “Rule 16(b)” was changed to “Rule 16.1(b).”
- In the second paragraph of the note to paragraph (c)(4), the third sentence (which concerned class-member discovery and began “For example, it is widely agreed”) was struck.
- In the note to paragraph (c)(9), the phrase “Even if the court has not” was changed to “Whether or not the court has.”

Discovery Subcommittee Projects. Professor Marcus reported on this item. This subcommittee is considering four issues, of which one may not pan out, and the others are in various states of evolution.

One issue is how to serve a subpoena. Rule 45(b)(1) says that service requires “delivering” the subpoena to the witness. Does that mean in-hand? By Twitter? Perhaps there are amendments that could improve the rule. Rules Law Clerk Chris Pryby wrote an excellent memorandum on state practices for serving subpoenas. The subcommittee will consider that new information.

Second, the subcommittee is considering whether to make rules about filings under seal. The agenda book shows how the subcommittee’s thinking has evolved. When the subcommittee first learned about an Administrative Office project on sealed filings, the subcommittee thought it should wait for that project to finish; now the subcommittee has been told it should not wait. One question is: what standard should be used? The subcommittee’s initial effort provides simply that the standard is not the same as that governing issuance of a protective order for information exchanged through discovery. Another question is: what procedures should be used? The subcommittee identified a wide variety of procedural issues, listed on pages 810–11 of the agenda book, that could be addressed by a uniform national rule. But the scope of what would ultimately be addressed is uncertain. Professor Marcus asked for input on whether clerk’s offices would welcome a national rule on this.

Third, Judge Michael Baylson submitted a proposal concerning discovery abroad under Rule 28 (Persons Before Whom Depositions May Be Taken). This is not a rule that most attorneys often deal with. The subcommittee is beginning to look at this proposal.

Finally, the FJC has completed a thorough study of the mandatory-initial-discovery pilot project. Its findings do not appear to support drastic changes to the rules. The subcommittee will consider whether any changes to the rules are warranted in light of the study.

REPORT OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON EVIDENCE RULES

Judge Patrick Schiltz and Professors Daniel Capra and Liesa Richter presented the report of the Advisory Committee on Evidence Rules, which last met in Washington, D.C., on April 28, 2023. The advisory committee presented five action items and one information item. The advisory committee’s report and the draft minutes of its last meeting were included in the agenda book beginning at page 910.

Action Items

New Rule 107 (Illustrative Aids). Judge Schiltz reported on this item. The advisory committee sought final approval of new Rule 107, which appeared starting on page 920 of the agenda book.

Illustrative aids are not themselves evidence. They are instead devices to help the trier of fact understand the evidence. Illustrative aids are used in virtually every trial, but the Federal Rules of Evidence do not address them. Nor do the other rules of practice and procedure. The new rule would fill this gap.

The rule as published would do five things. First, it would define illustrative aids, and it would give judges and litigants a common vocabulary and at least a touchstone in trying to distinguish illustrative aids from admissible evidence.

Second, it would provide a standard for the judge and the parties to apply in deciding whether an illustrative aid may be used: the utility of the aid in assisting comprehension must not be substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusing the issues, misleading the jury, undue delay, or wasting time. The advisory committee specifically asked commentators to address whether it should be just an “outweighed” standard or a “substantially outweighed” standard.

Third, the new rule as published provided a notice requirement. Before showing the jury an illustrative aid, a litigant would first need to show it to the other side and give the other side a chance to object.

Fourth, the rule bars illustrative aids from going to the jury room unless the parties consent to it or the court makes an exception for good cause.

Finally, the rule would require that, where practicable, illustrative aids be made part of the record so that, if an issue about an illustrative aid comes up on appeal, the appellate court has it in the record.

Professor Capra listed several changes to the proposed rule's committee note made since its publication for public comment but not noted in the agenda book. (These changes are among those listed at the end of this section.) He then discussed the public comments on the proposed new rule. There were many comments and much opposition to the notice requirement. Commenters gave various arguments against the notice requirement, including that it would make litigation more expensive, that it was unnecessary, and that it would steal attorneys' thunder. The advisory committee decided to delete the notice requirement from the proposed rule and instead discuss the issue of notice in the committee note.

Professor Capra also discussed the advisory committee's decision to use the "substantially outweighed" standard. This standard tracks that in Rule 403, and it is geared toward admitting illustrative aids. Based on the public comment, the advisory committee decided that it did not make sense for different tests to apply to evidence and illustrative aids.

Public comment also led the advisory committee to choose the new rule's location within the Federal Rules of Evidence. The rule was published for public comment as Rule 611(d) because Rule 611(a) is frequently used by courts to regulate illustrative aids. But Rule 611, which is in Article Six, is about witnesses, and illustrative aids are not really about witnesses. The new rule fits better in Article One, which is about rules of general applicability. Therefore the proposed rule was designated as new Rule 107.

Last, Professor Capra noted that a new subdivision (d) was added to new Rule 107 to direct courts and litigants to Rule 1006 for summaries of voluminous evidence because there is a lot of confusion in the courts about the difference between summaries and illustrative aids.

A practitioner member observed that he, like other members of the trial bar, had been very concerned about the proposed rule as published. He supported the deletion of the notice requirement and the use of "substantially outweighed" as the standard; he hoped that the latter would encourage the use of illustrative aids. The member stressed that some illustrative aids equate to a written version of the lawyer's actual presentation, such that providing advance notice of the aid would equate to a preview of that presentation. Such disclosures, he argued, would impair truth-seeking and increase the number of objections. So this member had concerns about the seventh paragraph of the committee note (shown on page 923 of the agenda book), which addressed the question of notice in a way that this member thought put too much of a thumb on the scale in favor of advance notice. The member suggested adding the following as the penultimate sentence of the paragraph: "In addition, in some cases, advance disclosure may improperly preview witness examination or attorney argument or encourage excessive objections.” Asked to explain what number of objections would be optimal, the member modified his suggested sentence by deleting “or encourage excessive objections.” The member also suggested revising the last sentence of the paragraph to reflect the fact that often the parties will resolve issues concerning advance notice by agreement; Professor Capra expressed reluctance to make that change because the potential for the parties to resolve an issue by agreement exists for many types of disputes.

A judge member suggested cutting the entire paragraph discussing notice. The member thought that the paragraph reflected an increasingly outdated view, and it was heavily leaning in a direction objected to by so many commenters. At the least, this member argued, the sentence beginning with the word “ample” should be replaced with the sentence suggested by the practitioner member.

Another judge member likened issues surrounding the definition of “illustrative aid” to issues prevalent in disputes about summary witnesses. The member suggested refining the definition of illustrative aid so that it cannot be used as a vehicle to bring in extra-record information. Professor Capra thought that such a situation would be prevented by Rule 403: if an aid contained additional evidence not yet in the record, that additional evidence would be evaluated under Rule 403. The practitioner member suggested that the “substantially outweighed” standard would address this problem; a purported aid that contained evidence not in the record would be subject to multiple objections, including that it would create unfair prejudice. Professor Capra noted that the Rule 403 and Rule 107(a) balancing tests would work the same way.

Judge Bates asked what would happen if someone used some type of illustrative aid containing certain terms and added a definition not in evidence—supplying additional information beyond what had been admitted into evidence in the case. Professor Capra thought that Rule 403 would prevent that from happening because of the added information’s prejudicial effect.

Judge Schiltz remarked that it is difficult to define illustrative aids to exclude those sorts of situations. The rule gives a negative definition of illustrative aids—that they are not evidence. The rule has to state the idea fairly generally and let trial judges apply it. For instance, the rule cannot say illustrative aids are limited to summaries or compilations because they are much broader than that.

The judge member who had raised the concern about the inclusion of extra-record information again suggested stating explicitly that an illustrative aid cannot include information not already in the record. Professor Capra asked if putting “admissible” on line 4—“understand admissible evidence or argument”—would be satisfactory. The judge member responded that, no, someone could help the trier of fact understand admissible evidence by introducing extra-record evidence, as in Judge Bates’ earlier illustration. The judge member also thought that whether the aid’s utility in assisting comprehension is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice is not the correct test for introducing unadmitted evidence through illustrative aids; rather, the presence of that unadmitted evidence should disqualify the aid from being used altogether. But the rule currently does not have anything that prevents that.

The judge member further commented that it might be worth adding a requirement in (b) to tell the jury that illustrative aids are not evidence. Professor Capra responded that it was in the committee note instead because most rules of evidence do not address jury instructions in the text.

A practitioner member commented that it was important to keep in mind that the rule as it now stood encompassed illustrative aids used throughout a trial, including during opening and closing arguments. An illustrative aid during a closing argument will typically include argument; it may for example include headings that characterize evidence a certain way.

Professor Bartell suggested taking the fourth sentence of the first paragraph of the committee note and placing it in the rule text to define “illustrative aid.” A judge member expressed support for that suggestion. Professor Capra said that the advisory committee, after repeated consideration, felt that the definition did not work as well in the rule text as in the committee note.

A judge member expressed appreciation for the proposed new rule, and predicted that it would clear up confusion concerning when an exhibit goes back to the jury. The rule does a good job of balancing the interests on that issue. The member also thought that attorneys would generally use common sense to know not to add unadmitted evidence to an illustrative aid. One textual addition that might help reinforce that behavior could be to add the word “the” before the word “evidence” in line 4 of Rule 107(a) as shown on page 920 of the agenda book—“understand the evidence or argument.” The member further noted that it would probably be necessary to give limiting instructions to ensure that the jury uses illustrative aids properly. Professor Capra accepted the proposed edit of adding the word “the” before “evidence.”

Judge Bates wondered if the concern about adding extra-record information evidence could be addressed by adding to the first paragraph of the committee note: “An illustrative aid may not be used to bring in additional information that is not in evidence.” Judge Schiltz responded that that would limit argument too much—a lot of argument brings in information not technically in evidence. Judge Bates amended the suggested addition to refer to “additional factual information.” Professor Capra reiterated his belief that if there is other evidence offered in the guise of an illustrative aid, it would be analyzed under Rule 403, not 107.

A judge member understood the concern raised about adding unadmitted evidence to an illustrative aid but thought it was not worth worrying about. It is like closing arguments—there is not a rule saying that something not in evidence cannot be mentioned in closing argument, yet any attempt to do so is met with an objection.

An academic member worried about the possibility that confusion about exactly what an illustrative aid is—how it is different, what it captures, what it does not capture, and how it is implemented—would create a flurry of objections and litigation. The answer might be to monitor the caselaw and anecdotal reports so as to learn how the rule is implemented.

Ms. Shapiro commented that the DOJ trial attorneys with whom she had spoken were thrilled to have a rule like this because the courts’ treatment of illustrative aids—even their vocabulary—has been inconsistent.

Judge Bates asked whether the last sentence of the third paragraph of the committee note should be revised by adding “or argument” after “evidence” on page 922. Professor Capra accepted this change.

As to the seventh paragraph of the committee note (on page 923), Judge Bates also pointed out that a decision had to be made concerning the suggestions to delete or amend that paragraph’s discussion of advance notice. Judge Schiltz recalled that a majority of the advisory committee members had favored a notice requirement; the committee understood the opposition to such a requirement, and had meant to accomplish a compromise by deleting the requirement from the rule text but including the notice discussion in the committee note. He was concerned about changing the committee note too much after achieving that compromise. He thought that adding the sentence about the possible downsides of advance notice and maybe other modest changes would be acceptable, but cutting the paragraph altogether would go too far.

A judge member suggested cutting the sentence that was the penultimate sentence of the seventh paragraph as shown on page 923 (the sentence that began “Ample advance notice”). Judge Schiltz agreed to that change. A judge member expressed support for retaining that sentence because it helpfully illustrated different scenarios for the use of illustrative aids; Professor Capra added that the sentence presented a balanced viewpoint. Another practitioner member, though, supported deleting the sentence because it focused on whether requiring advance notice can be done rather than whether it should be done—the latter being, in this member’s view, the more important question. Judge Schiltz agreed that he would rather take out the sentence than possibly lose the support of those concerned about the notice issue.

A judge member questioned the use of the term “infinite variety” in the fourth sentence of the note paragraph concerning advance notice. Professor Garner suggested “wide variety,” which Professor Capra accepted.

Professor Capra summarized the amendments to the proposal. Upon motion by a member, seconded by another, and without opposition: The Standing Committee approved the proposed new Rule 107 with one change to the proposed rule to add “the” before “evidence” on line 4 on page 920 of the agenda book, and the following changes to the committee note as printed on pages 921–24 of the agenda book:

- In the first paragraph, fifth line, in the phrase “as that latter term is vague and has been subject,” the language “is vague and” was struck.
- In the second paragraph, third line, the word “factfinder” was changed to “trier of fact.”
- In the second paragraph, last line, the language “to study it, and to use it to help determine the disputed facts” was changed to “and use it to help determine the disputed facts.” The comma preceding this line was also struck.
- In the third paragraph, third line, the word “factfinder” was changed to “trier of fact.” In the third paragraph, second-to-last line, the phrase “finder of fact” was changed to “trier of fact,” and the phrase “or argument” was added after “understand evidence.”

- In the fourth paragraph, second line, the word “information” was changed to “evidence.”
- In the seventh paragraph (which commences “Many courts require”), the sentence “That said, there is an infinite variety of illustrative aids, and an infinite variety of circumstances under which they might be used,” was changed to “That said, there is a wide variety of illustrative aids and a wide variety of circumstances under which they might be used.”
- In the seventh paragraph, the sentence beginning “Ample advance notice” was struck and replaced with the sentence: “In addition, in some cases, advance disclosure may improperly preview witness examination or attorney argument.”

Amendment to Rule 1006 (Summaries to Prove Content). Judge Schiltz reported on this item. The advisory committee sought final approval for an amendment to Rule 1006, which appeared on page 965 of the agenda book.

Rule 1006 allows a summary of voluminous admissible evidence to be admitted into evidence itself. Unlike an illustrative aid, these summaries are evidence and may go to the jury room and be used like any other evidence. The summary may be used in lieu of the voluminous underlying evidence or in addition to some or all of that voluminous underlying evidence.

Courts have had a great deal of difficulty with Rule 1006. Some incorrectly say that a Rule 1006 summary is not evidence; some incorrectly say that a Rule 1006 summary cannot be admitted unless all the underlying voluminous evidence is first admitted; and some incorrectly say that a Rule 1006 summary cannot be admitted if any of the underlying evidence has been admitted.

The proposed amendment would not change the substance of Rule 1006. It would instead clarify the rule in order to reduce the likelihood of errors.

Professor Richter reported that the advisory committee received seven public comments on the proposed amendment. Those comments were largely supportive. There was one note of criticism. A longstanding part of the foundation for a Rule 1006 summary is that the underlying voluminous materials must be admissible in evidence, even though they need not actually be admitted. Courts were not having a problem with that foundational requirement, so the advisory committee did not include it in the version published for public comment. The advisory committee recognized this omission and, at its Fall 2022 meeting, unanimously agreed to add the requirement of admissibility to the rule text. This addition was shown on page 965, line 5. That was the only change to the proposed amendment since the public-comment period.

Judge Bates asked whether, in line 4, the word “offered” should be added, so that the text reads, “The court may admit as evidence a summary, chart, or calculation offered to prove . . . .”

Turning to the fourth paragraph of the committee note, a judge member asked whether the verb “meet” in the phrase “meet the evidence” was sufficiently clear. After some discussion among the committee members and the advisory committee’s representatives, the advisory committee’s representatives agreed to replace the word “meet” with “evaluate.”

Upon motion by a member, seconded by another, and without opposition: The Standing Committee approved the proposed amendment to Rule 1006 with the following changes: in the rule text, adding the word “offered” after “calculation” as shown on page 965, line 4, of the agenda book; and in the fourth paragraph of the committee note, replacing the word “meet” with “evaluate.”

Amendment to Rule 613(b) (Extrinsic Evidence of a Prior Inconsistent Statement). Judge Schiltz reported on this item. The advisory committee sought final approval of an amendment to Rule 613(b), which appeared on page 952 of the agenda book.

Rule 613(b) addresses the situation in which a witness takes the stand and testifies, and a party wants to impeach that witness by introducing extrinsic evidence—for example, the testimony of another witness, or a document—that the witness made an inconsistent statement in the past. Under the common law, before that party is allowed to bring in that extrinsic evidence to show that the witness made an inconsistent statement in the past, the witness had to be given a chance to explain or deny making the statement. This is called the requirement of prior presentation.

Rule 613(b) took the opposite approach: as long as sometime during the trial the witness had a chance to explain or deny the prior inconsistent statement, the extrinsic evidence could come in. But most judges ignore this rule—Judge Schiltz admitted ignoring it himself—and follow the common law. The common-law rule makes sense because the vast majority of the time, the witness will admit making the inconsistent statement, obviating the need to unnecessarily lengthen the trial by admitting the extrinsic evidence. Further, if the extrinsic evidence is admitted after the witness testifies, then someone has to bring the witness back for the chance to explain or deny it—and the witness may have flown across the country.

The proposed amendment therefore restores the common-law requirement of prior presentation. But it gives the court discretion to waive it—for example, if a party was not aware of the inconsistent statement until the witness finished testifying.

Professor Richter reported that the advisory committee received four public comments on Rule 613(b), all in support of restoring the prior-presentation requirement. The comments noted that it would make for orderly and efficient impeachment and impose no impediment to fairness. The proposal would also align the rule’s text with the practice followed in most federal courts. There was no change to the rule text from the version that was published for public comment.

Upon motion by a member, seconded by another, and without opposition: The Standing Committee approved the proposed amendment to Rule 613(b).

Amendment to Rule 801(d)(2) (An Opposing Party’s Statement). Judge Schiltz reported on this item. The advisory committee sought final approval of an amendment to Rule 801(d)(2), which appeared starting on page 956 of the agenda book.

Rule 801(d)(2) provides an exception to the hearsay rule for statements of a party-opponent. Courts are split about how to apply this rule when the party at trial is not the declarant but rather the declarant’s successor in interest. For example, suppose the declarant is injured in an accident, makes an out-of-court statement about the incident that caused the declarant’s injuries, then dies. If the declarant’s estate sues, may the defendant use the deceased declarant’s out-of-court statement against the estate? Some courts say yes because the estate just stands in the shoes of the declarant and should be treated the same. Some courts say no because it was technically the human-being declarant who made the out-of-court statement, not the legal entity (the estate) that is the actual party.

The proposed amendment would adopt the former position: if the statement would be admissible against the declarant as a party, then it's also admissible against the party that stands in the shoes of the declarant. The advisory committee thought that the fairest outcome, and it also eliminates an incentive to use assignments or other devices to manipulate litigation.

Professor Capra reported that there was sparse public comment. Some comments suggested that the term “successor in interest” be used, but that was problematic because the term is used in another evidence rule, where it is applied expansively. Because it is not supposed to be applied expansively here, the committee did not adopt that change.

Judge Bates highlighted the statement in the committee note's last paragraph, that if the declarant makes the statement after the rights or obligations have been transferred, then the statement would not be admissible. He asked whether that was a substantive provision and whether there was an easy way to express it in the rule's text. Professor Capra responded that there was not an easy way to express it in the text, and this issue would arise very rarely. Furthermore, the rationale for attribution would not apply if the interest has already been transferred. The advisory committee decided in two separate votes not to include that issue in the rule text and instead to keep it in the committee note.

Turning back to the proposed rule text on line 29 of page 957 (“If a party's claim, defense, or potential liability is directly derived ...”), Professor Hartnett asked whether “directly” was the appropriate term to use. For example, if a right passes through two assignments or successors in interest, would “directly derived” capture that scenario? Professor Capra responded that the term comes from the case law, and “derived” on its own seemed too diffuse.

Upon motion by a member, seconded by another, and without opposition: The Standing Committee approved the proposed amendment to Rule 801(d)(2).

Amendment to Rule 804(b)(3) (Statement Against Interest). Judge Schiltz reported on this item. The advisory committee sought final approval of a proposed amendment to Rule 804(b)(3), which appeared starting on page 960 of the agenda book.

Rule 804(b)(3) provides an exception to the hearsay rule for declarations against interest. The proposed amendment addresses a particular application of that rule.

In a criminal case in which the out-of-court statement is a declaration against penal interest—typically, a statement by somebody outside of court that the declarant was the one who actually committed the crime for which the defendant is now on trial—then the proponent of that statement must provide corroborating circumstances that clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement.

There's a dispute in the courts about how to decide if such corroborating circumstances exist. Some courts say that the judge may only look at the inherent guarantees of trustworthiness underlying the statement itself, not at any independent evidence (such as security-camera footage or DNA evidence) that would support or refute the out-of-court confession. But most courts say the judge can look at independent evidence.

The proposed amendment resolves the split. It takes the side of the courts that say that the judges can look at independent evidence.

Professor Richter noted that the advisory committee received five public comments on this proposal, all of them in support. But several expressed confusion because, as originally drafted, the proposed rule used the term “corroborating” twice in the same sentence. The distinction was not clear between the finding of “corroborating circumstances” that a court had to make and the corroborating “evidence” that a court could use to make that finding.

The advisory committee modified the text slightly to avoid using the term “corroborating” twice and to clarify the distinction between the finding and the evidence. The revised rule text directs the court to consider “the totality of circumstances under which [the out-of-court statement] was made and any evidence that supports or contradicts it.” Conforming changes were made to the committee note. The committee note also explains that a 2019 amendment to the residual hearsay exception (Rule 807) that does the same thing—expanding the evidence a court may use to find trustworthiness under that exception—should be interpreted similarly, even though amended Rules 804(b)(3) and 807 use slightly different wording.

A judge member observed that the criterion in the rule—that the statement tends to expose the declarant to criminal liability—was broader than Judge Schiltz’s explanation that the statement exposes the declarant to criminal liability for the crime for which the defendant is being tried; the member asked which was the intended test. Judge Schiltz responded that his explanation was just the most common example, and the rule still reaches all statements exposing the declarant to criminal liability.

Judge Bates asked whether it is correct to say in the committee note that the language used in Rule 807, speaking only of “corroborating” evidence, is consistent with the “evidence that supports or contradicts” language in the proposed amendment to Rule 804. “Supporting or contradicting evidence” includes evidence that is not “corroborating.” Professor Capra responded that, because Rule 807’s committee note also discusses an absence of evidence, courts applying the post-2019 Rule 807 have considered evidence contradicting the account. Thus, the two rules, though not identical, are consistent. Judge Schiltz noted that the current proposal gets to the same point in a cleaner way. Professor Capra also remarked that the phrase “corroborating circumstances” was not changed because it has been in the rule for 50 years and there is a lot of law about it.

A judge member asked why the proposed rule uses a narrow term like “contradicts” instead of a broader term like “undermines,” given that “supports” is a broad statement and the opposing term ought to have similarly broad scope. After some discussion, the advisory committee representatives agreed to replace “contradicts” with “undermines” (in line 27 on page 961 of the agenda book) and to make a corresponding change to the committee note.

Upon motion by a member, seconded by another, and without opposition: The Standing Committee approved the proposed amendment to Rule 804(b)(3) with the following changes:

in the text of Rule 804(b)(3)(B), replacing “contradicts” with “undermines,” and making the same change in the committee note.

Juror Questions. Judge Schiltz reported on this item. The advisory committee proposed an amendment that would have established minimum procedural protections if a court decided to let jurors pose questions for witnesses. The proposed rule was clear that the advisory committee did not take any position on whether that practice should be allowed.

The advisory committee presented this proposal at a previous meeting of the Standing Committee. Some members of the Standing Committee expressed concern that putting safeguards in the rules would encourage the practice.

The matter was returned to the advisory committee for further study. It held a symposium on the topic at its Fall 2022 meeting. The advisory committee then discussed the issue at its Spring 2023 meeting and decided to table the proposal. There was significant opposition to it even within the advisory committee.

Professor Capra noted that the advisory committee has sent its work to the committee updating the Benchbook for U.S. District Court Judges. Judge Schiltz explained that the advisory committee suggested that the proposed procedural safeguards may be appropriate for inclusion in the revision of the Benchbook that is currently being worked on.

REPORT OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON CIVIL RULES (CONTINUED)

Rule 41(a)(1)(A) (Voluntary Dismissal by the Plaintiff Without a Court Order). Professor Bradt reported on this item.

The question under this rule is: what and when may a plaintiff voluntarily dismiss without a court order and without prejudice? The rule refers to the plaintiff’s ability to voluntarily dismiss an “action.” What does that word mean? Does it mean the entire case, all claims against all defendants? Or can it mean something less? The circuits are split on whether a plaintiff could dismiss all claims against one defendant in a multidefendant case. There’s also a district-court split about whether a plaintiff may voluntarily dismiss even less without a court order, such as an individual claim.

The Rule 41 Subcommittee, chaired by Judge Cathy Bissoon, is trying to figure out whether and to what extent this is a real-world problem rather than one that courts effectively muddle through. That is, can judges effectively narrow cases, despite the fact that Rule 41(a)(1)(A) speaks only of an “action”? Since the January 2023 Standing Committee meeting, the Rule 41 Subcommittee has conducted outreach with Lawyers for Civil Justice and the American Association for Justice, and it has an upcoming meeting with the National Employment Lawyers Association.

If this is a real problem, the next step would be to ask whether it can be solved by consensus. The subcommittee may need to consider the deeper question of how much flexibility a plaintiff ought to have. And if a plaintiff does have that flexibility, by when must it be exercised? The rule currently says that a plaintiff has until the answer or a motion for summary judgment is filed. But there might be a good reason to move that deadline up to the filing of a Rule 12 motion to dismiss. Further, an amendment to Rule 41 might have downstream effects on other rules designed to facilitate flexibility during litigation, such as Rule 15.

Judge Bates observed that the Eleventh Circuit in Rosell v. VMSB, LLC, 67 F.4th 1141, 1143 (11th Cir. 2023), recently held that an “action” means the whole case and therefore dismissed an appeal for lack of jurisdiction. It seems to be an issue that is live in the courts and could be causing problems for litigants.

Professor Bradt noted that the word “action” also appears in, and the interpretive questions thus extend to, Rule 41(a)(2) (concerning dismissals by court order).

Rule 7.1 (Disclosure Statement). Professor Bradt reported on this item.

The advisory committee has formed a subcommittee to examine Rule 7.1, which requires corporate litigants to disclose certain financial interests. The rule helps inform judges whether they must recuse themselves because of a financial interest in a party or the subject matter. It requires a party to disclose its ownership by a parent corporation. The problem is that the rule may not accurately reflect all of the different kinds of ownership interests that may exist in a party. One topic under discussion is when a “grandparent” corporation owns the parent corporation.

This issue has gotten a great deal of attention from the public and from Congress. At the last advisory-committee meeting, a subcommittee to investigate the issue was appointed, and it will be chaired by Justice Jane Bland of the Texas Supreme Court. The subcommittee will have its first meeting soon. It will initially research the relevant case law and local rules in the federal courts, and it will also look to state courts for insight into how best to resolve the issue.

Professor Beale wondered whether the Administrative Office or some other entity could create a database in which one could query a corporation and find all ownership interests in the corporation, in the corporation’s owners, and so on, rather than depending on parties’ disclosures. Professor Bradt responded that the subcommittee is going to look at this possibility, but a technological solution may be challenging because of the proliferation of many kinds of corporate structures.

Professor Bradt noted that it might make sense for the subcommittee to work with the Appellate Rules Committee on this issue because many of the questions addressed during the report about amicus disclosures parallel the questions the subcommittee will be addressing in this project.

A practitioner member commented that law firms have to investigate corporate ownership for conflict purposes. Services already exist with this information. The wheel does not necessarily need to be reinvented. Professor Bradt agreed, but also noted that the subcommittee wants to be mindful of whether those services would be sufficiently accessible to parties with fewer resources.

Additional Items. Professor Marcus briefly reported on several additional items.

Rule 23, dealing with class actions, is before the advisory committee again, this time with respect to two different issues. First, in a recent First Circuit opinion, Judge Kayatta addressed the question of incentive awards for class representatives. Because the Supreme Court has so far declined to grant certiorari on this issue, it remains before the advisory committee. Second, the Lawyers for Civil Justice suggested a change to Rule 23(b)(3) on the “superiority” prong to let a court conclude that some nonadjudicative alternative might be superior to a class action.

The advisory committee also continues to look at methods to sensibly handle applications for in forma pauperis (“IFP”) status. Perhaps it should even be called something different so that people who are eligible will understand what IFP means.

Finally, three suggestions have been removed from the advisory committee’s agenda. The first, suggested in 2016 by Judge Graber and then-Judge Gorsuch, would have amended Rule 38, dealing with jury-trial demands, in response to the declining frequency of civil jury trials. But studies suggest that Rule 38 is not the source of the problem, so an amendment to the rule did not seem the appropriate solution.

Second, Senators Tillis and Leahy wrote to the Chief Justice about a district judge who was extremely active in patent-infringement cases. This judge purportedly held several Markman hearings a week, using deputized masters or judicial assistants to assist him with that caseload. The senators did not believe that Rule 53 authorized that kind of use of special masters. But the senators did not suggest that Rule 53 should be changed. Also, the relevant court has revised its assignment of patent-infringement cases in a way that can reduce this problem. This item is therefore no longer on the advisory committee’s agenda.

Third, an attorney proposed amending Rule 11 to forbid state bar authorities to impose any discipline on anyone who is accused of misconduct in federal court unless a federal court has already imposed Rule 11 sanctions. Because this proposal misconstrues the function of Rule 11, the advisory committee removed this proposal from its agenda.

REPORT OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON CRIMINAL RULES

Judge James Dever and Professors Sara Sun Beale and Nancy King presented the report of the Advisory Committee on Criminal Rules, which last met in Washington, D.C., on April 20, 2023. The advisory committee presented three information items and no action items. The advisory committee’s report and the draft minutes of its last meeting were included in the agenda book beginning at page 875.

Information Items

Rule 17 and Pretrial Subpoena Authority. Judge Dever reported on this item. Judge Jacqueline Nguyen chairs the Rule 17 Subcommittee. Rule 17, which deals with subpoenas in criminal trials, has not been updated in about 60 years. The New York City Bar Association’s White Collar Crime Committee submitted a proposal to amend it.

The advisory committee responded to the proposal by first asking whether there is a problem with how Rule 17 currently works. It began gathering information in its October 2022 meeting, and it has continued that information-gathering by asking how companies that deal with big data respond to subpoenas.

About a third of the states have criminal-subpoena rules that are structured differently than the federal rules. The Rule 17 Subcommittee reported on the topic at the advisory committee's April 2023 meeting.

The advisory committee is considering how to appropriately distinguish procedurally between protected information, such as medical records, personnel records, or privileged information, and other information, such as a video of events occurring outside a store.

Professor Beale added that the subpoena issue is an important question. Defense attorneys have very little means to get information from third parties because Rule 17 has been so narrowly interpreted.

Rule 23 and Jury-Trial Waiver Without Government Consent. Judge Dever reported on this item.

The American College of Trial Lawyers' Federal Criminal Procedure Committee submitted a proposal to amend Rule 23(a) to eliminate the requirement that the government consent to a defendant's request for a bench trial.

Currently, a defendant must waive a jury trial in writing, the government must consent, and the court must also approve the waiver. About a third of the states do not require the prosecution's consent to waive a jury trial. The federal rules have always required it.

The advisory committee has not yet appointed a subcommittee to review the proposal. It has asked the Federal Defenders and Criminal Justice Act lawyers on the advisory committee to gather more information. One premise of the proposal was that there is a backlog of trials because of COVID, but none of the district judges on the advisory committee had had that experience. So the advisory committee wanted to gather more information. That process is ongoing.

The advisory committee is also trying to gather information on what rationales, if any, the DOJ gives for not consenting to a jury trial. Part of what animates the discussion is that, although the Sixth Amendment talks about the accused's right to a jury trial, Article III, Section 2's directive that "[t]he Trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by Jury" does not mention the defendant. So the United States actually has its own, independent interest in having a jury trial.

Professor Beale predicted that the Rule 23 proposal would generate interesting discussion about whether it is appropriate for parties to be adversarial about demands or waivers of juries or whether there is something different about the jury as an institution that makes it inappropriate for parties to try to demand it or waive it for strategic advantage. There are also apparently differences in the government's practices among the 94 judicial districts. She thought that the advisory committee's attention to the issue might spur the DOJ to change its process on its own.

Judge Bates asked to clarify whether the Rule 23 investigation would only focus on the government's consent to bench trials, not court approval. Professor Beale confirmed that the proposal focused only on government consent.

Professor Marcus remarked that the proposal seems to expand the court's power by letting it decide whether to grant the defendant's request for a bench trial even though the government does not consent.

Judge Dever reiterated that only a minority of the states' practices currently align with the proposal. The federal rule had always required the government's consent, and the Supreme Court has rejected a constitutional challenge to it.

Judge Bates concluded by noting that the DOJ, whose practices vary from district to district, had volunteered to provide information about what they do and have done with respect to requests for bench trials.

Rule 49.1 (Privacy Protections for Filings Made with the Court). As to this item, Judge Dever deferred to Professor Bartell's previous report on Senator Wyden's suggestion concerning privacy protections and court filings.

OTHER COMMITTEE BUSINESS

Information Item

Legislative Update. Judge Bates and Mr. Pryby stated that there was no significant legislative activity to report since the last meeting of the Standing Committee.

Action Item

Judiciary Strategic Planning. This was the last item on the meeting's agenda. Judge Bates explained that the Standing Committee needed to provide input to the Judicial Conference's Executive Committee about the strategic plan for the federal judiciary. Judge Bates requested comment, either then or after the meeting, on the draft report that began on page 1005 of the agenda book.

Judge Bates then sought the Standing Committee's authorization to work with the Rules Committee Staff and Professor Struve to move forward with the report. Without objection: The Standing Committee so authorized Judge Bates.

New Business

No member raised new business.

CONCLUDING REMARKS

Before adjourning the meeting, Judge Bates thanked the committee members for their contributions and patience. The Standing Committee will next convene on January 4, 2024.

--

John S. Cooke, Director, and Dr. Tim Reagan, Senior Research Associate, Federal Judicial Center; and Elizabeth J. Shapiro, Deputy Director, Federal Programs Branch, Civil Division, Department of Justice, on behalf of Deputy Attorney General Lisa O. Monaco.

In addition to its general business, including a review of the status of pending rule amendments in different stages of the Rules Enabling Act process, and pending legislation affecting the rules, the Standing Committee received and responded to reports from the five advisory committees. The Committee also received an update on the coordinated work among the Appellate, Bankruptcy, Civil, and Criminal Rules Committees to consider two suggestions affecting all four Advisory Committees—suggestions to allow expanded access to electronic filing by pro se litigants and to modify the presumptive deadlines for electronic filing. An additional update concerned the start of coordinated work among the Bankruptcy, Civil, and Criminal Rules Committees to evaluate a proposal to adopt a unified standard for admission to the bar of federal district and bankruptcy courts. Finally, the Standing Committee approved a brief report regarding judiciary strategic planning.

FEDERAL RULES OF APPELLATE PROCEDURE

Rules Recommended for Approval and Transmission

The Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules recommended for final approval proposed amendments to Appellate Rules 32, 35, and 40, and the Appendix of Length Limits. The Standing Committee unanimously approved the Advisory Committee’s recommendations.

Rule 32 (Form of Briefs, Appendices, and Other Papers), Rule 35 (En Banc Determination), Rule 40 (Petition for Panel Rehearing), and Appendix of Length Limits

The Advisory Committee completed a comprehensive review of the rules governing panel and en banc rehearing, resulting in proposed amendments transferring the content of Rule 35 to Rule 40, bringing together in one place the relevant provisions dealing with rehearing. The proposed amendments to Rule 40 would clarify the distinct criteria for rehearing en banc and panel rehearing, and would eliminate redundancy. Rule 32 and the Appendix of Length Limits would be amended to reflect the transfer of the contents of Rule 35 to Rule 40. The proposed amendments were published in August 2022. The Advisory Committee reviewed the public comments and made no changes.

Recommendation: That the Judicial Conference approve the proposed amendments to Appellate Rules 32, 35, and 40, and the Appendix of Length Limits as set forth in Appendix A, and transmit them to the Supreme Court for consideration with a recommendation that they be adopted by the Court and transmitted to Congress in accordance with the law.

Rules Approved for Publication and Comment

The Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules submitted proposed amendments to Rule 6 (Appeal in a Bankruptcy Case) and Rule 39 (Costs on Appeal) with a recommendation that they be published for public comment in August 2023. The Standing Committee unanimously approved the Advisory Committee's recommendation.

Rule 6 (Appeal in a Bankruptcy Case)

The proposed amendments to Appellate Rule 6 would clarify the treatment of appeals in bankruptcy cases. A proposed amendment to Appellate Rule 6(a) would account for the fact that the time limits for certain post-judgment motions that reset the time to take an appeal from a district court to a court of appeals are different when the district court was exercising bankruptcy jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1334 than when it was exercising original jurisdiction under other statutory grants. The proposed committee note provides a table showing which Bankruptcy Rule governs each relevant type of post-judgment motion and the time allowed under the current version of the applicable Bankruptcy Rule. Proposed amendments to Appellate Rule 6(c) would address direct appeals in bankruptcy cases, which are governed by 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)(2). The Advisory Committee determined that Rule 6(c)'s current reliance on Rule 5 (Appeal by Permission) was misplaced and that there is considerable confusion in applying the Appellate Rules to direct appeals. For that reason, the proposed amendments to Rule 6(c) would address direct appeals in a largely self-contained way. Finally, the proposed amendments also provide more detailed guidance for litigants about initial procedural steps once authorization is granted for a direct appeal to the court of appeals.

Rule 39 (Costs)

The proposed amendments to Rule 39 would clarify the distinction between (1) the court of appeals deciding which parties must bear the costs and, if appropriate, in what percentages and (2) the court of appeals or the district court (or the clerk of either) calculating and taxing the dollar amount of costs upon the proper party or parties. In addition, the proposed amendments would codify the holding in City of San Antonio v. Hotels.com, L.P., 141 S. Ct. 1628 (2021)—that the allocation of costs by the court of appeals applies to both the costs taxable in the court of appeals and the costs taxable in the district court—and would provide a clearer procedure to ask the court of appeals to reconsider the allocation of costs. Finally, the proposed amendments would make Rule 39’s structure more parallel by adding a list of the costs taxable in the court of appeals to the current rule, which lists only the costs taxable in the district court.

Information Items

The Advisory Committee met on March 29, 2023. In addition to the proposals noted above, the Advisory Committee discussed several other matters. The Advisory Committee has been considering potential amendments to Rule 29 (Brief of an Amicus Curiae) for several years and considered possible amendments requiring the disclosure by amici curiae of information about contributions by parties and nonparties. In addition, the Advisory Committee completed a draft of amended Form 4 to create a more streamlined and less intrusive form to use when seeking to proceed in forma pauperis. Because the Rules of the Supreme Court require litigants to use the same form, the draft has been provided to the Clerk of the Supreme Court for review.

Finally, the Advisory Committee discussed new suggestions, including a suggestion regarding the redaction of Social Security numbers in court filings, a suggestion for a possible new rule regarding intervention on appeal, a suggestion regarding third-party litigation funding, and a suggestion to follow the Supreme Court’s lead in permitting the filing of amicus briefs without requiring the consent of the parties or the permission of the court.

FEDERAL RULES OF BANKRUPTCY PROCEDURE

Rules and Forms Recommended for Approval and Transmission

The Advisory Committee on Bankruptcy Rules recommended for final approval the following proposals: the proposed Restyled Bankruptcy Rules;<sup>1</sup> proposed amendments to Bankruptcy Rules 1007, 4004, 5009, 7001, and 9006; new Rule 8023.1;<sup>2</sup> the abrogation of Official Form 423; and a proposed amendment to Bankruptcy Official Form 410A. The Standing Committee unanimously approved the Advisory Committee’s recommendation.

Restyled Rules Parts I–IX (the 1000–9000 series of Bankruptcy Rules)

The Bankruptcy Rules are the fifth and final set of national procedural rules to be restyled. The Restyled Bankruptcy Rules were published for comment over several years in three sets: the 1000–2000 series of rules were published in August 2020, the 3000–6000 series in August 2021, and the final set, the 7000–9000 series, in August 2022. After each publication period, the Advisory Committee on Bankruptcy Rules carefully considered the comments received and made recommendations for final approval based on the same general drafting guidelines and principles used in restyling the Appellate, Criminal, Civil, and Evidence Rules, as outlined below. The Restyled Bankruptcy Rules as a whole, including the revisions based on public comments and a final, comprehensive review, are now being recommended for final approval.

General Guidelines. Guidance in drafting, usage, and style was provided by Bryan A. Garner, Guidelines for Drafting and Editing Court Rules, Administrative Office of the United States Courts (1996), and Bryan A. Garner, Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage (2d ed. 1995). See also Joseph Kimble, Guiding Principles for Restyling the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Mich. Bar J., Sept. 2005, at 56 and Mich. Bar J., Oct. 2005, at 52; Joseph Kimble, Lessons in Drafting from the New Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 12 Scribes J. Legal Writing 25 (2008-2009).

Formatting Changes. Many of the changes in the restyled Bankruptcy Rules result from using consistent formatting to achieve clearer presentations. The rules are broken down into constituent parts, using progressively indented subparagraphs with headings and substituting vertical for horizontal lists. “Hanging indents” are used throughout. These formatting changes make the structure of the rules clearer and make the restyled rules easier to read and understand even when the words are not changed.

Changes to Reduce Inconsistent, Ambiguous, Redundant, Repetitive, or Archaic Words. The restyled rules reduce the use of inconsistent terms that say the same thing in different ways. Because different words are presumed to have different meanings, such inconsistencies can result in confusion. The restyled rules reduce inconsistencies by using the same words to express the same meaning. The restyled rules also minimize the use of inherently ambiguous words, as well as redundant “intensifiers”—expressions that attempt to add emphasis but instead state the obvious and create negative implications for other rules. The absence of intensifiers in the restyled rules does not change their substantive meaning. The restyled rules also remove words and concepts that are outdated or redundant.

Rule Numbers. The restyled rules keep the same numbers to minimize the effect on research. Subdivisions have been rearranged within some rules to achieve greater clarity and simplicity.

No Substantive Change. The style changes to the rules are intended to make no changes in substantive meaning. The Advisory Committee made special efforts to reject any purported style improvement that might result in a substantive change in the application of a rule. The Advisory Committee also declined to modify “sacred phrases”—those that have become so familiar in practice that to alter them would be unduly disruptive to practice and expectations. One example is “meeting of creditors,” a term that is widely used and well understood in bankruptcy practice.

Rules Enacted by Congress. Where Congress has enacted a rule by statute, in particular Rule 2002(n) (Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-353, 98 Stat. 333, 357), Rule 3001(g) (Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-353, 98 Stat. 333, 361), and Rule 7004(b) and (h) (Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994, Pub. L. No. 103-394, 108 Stat. 4106, 4118), the Advisory Committee has not restyled the rule.

Amendments to Rule 1007 (Lists, Schedules, Statements, and Other Documents; Time Limits), related amendments to Rules 4004 (Grant or Denial of Discharge), 5009 (Closing Chapter 7, Chapter 12, Chapter 13, and Chapter 15 Cases; Order Declaring Lien Satisfied), and 9006 (Computing and Extending Time; Time for Motion Papers), and abrogation of Official Form 423 (Certification About a Financial Management Course)

The amendments to Rule 1007(b)(7) delete the directive to file a statement on Official Form 423 (Certification About a Financial Management Course) and make filing the course certificate itself the exclusive means showing that the debtor has taken a postpetition course in personal financial management. References in other parts of Rule 1007 and in Rules 4004, 5009, and 9006 to the “statement” required by Rule 1007(b)(7) are changed to refer to a “certificate.” Because Official Form 423 is no longer necessary, the Advisory Committee recommends that it be abrogated.

Rule 7001 (Scope of Rules of Part VII)

The amendment to Rule 7001(a) creates an exception for certain turnover proceedings under § 542(a) of the Code. An individual debtor may need an order requiring the prompt return by a third party of tangible personal property—such as an automobile or tools of the trade—in order to produce income to fund a plan or to regain the use of exempt property. As noted by Justice Sonia Sotomayor in her concurrence in City of Chicago v. Fulton, 141 S. Ct. 585, 592–95 (2021), the procedures applicable to adversary proceedings can be unnecessarily time-consuming in such a situation. Instead, the proposed amendment allows the debtor to seek turnover of such property by motion under § 542(a), and the procedures of Rule 9014 would apply.<sup>3</sup>

Rule 8023.1 (Substitution of Parties)

New Rule 8023.1 is modeled on Appellate Rule 43. Neither Appellate Rule 43 nor Civil Rule 25 applies to parties in bankruptcy appeals to the district court or bankruptcy appellate panel. This new rule is intended to fill that gap by providing consistent rules (in connection with such appeals) for the substitution of parties upon death or for any other reason.

Official Form 410A (Proof of Claim, Attachment A)

Part 3 of Form 410A is amended to provide for separate itemization of principal due and interest due. Because under Bankruptcy Code § 1322(e) the amount necessary to cure a default is “determined in accordance with the underlying agreement and applicable nonbankruptcy law,” it may be necessary for a debtor who is curing arrearages under § 1325(a)(5) to know which portion of the total arrearages is principal and which is interest.

Recommendation: That the Judicial Conference:

- a. Approve the proposed Restyled Bankruptcy Rules and proposed amendments to Bankruptcy Rules 1007, 4004, 5009, 7001, and 9006, and new Rule 8023.1, as set forth in Appendix B, and transmit them to the Supreme Court for consideration with a recommendation that they be adopted by the Court and transmitted to Congress in accordance with the law;
- b. Approve, contingent on the approval of the above-noted amendments to Bankruptcy Rule 1007, the abrogation of Bankruptcy Official Form 423, effective in all bankruptcy proceedings commenced after December 1, 2024, and, insofar as just and practicable, all proceedings pending on December 1, 2024; and
- c. Approve, effective December 1, 2023, the proposed amendment to Bankruptcy Official Form 410A, as set forth in Appendix B, for use in all bankruptcy proceedings commenced after the effective date and, insofar as just and practicable, all proceedings pending on the effective date.

Rules and Forms Approved for Publication and Comment

The Advisory Committee on Bankruptcy Rules submitted proposed amendments to Rules 3002.1 and 8006 and proposed six new Official Forms related to the Rule 3002.1 amendments, Official Forms 410C13-M1, 410C13-M1R, 410C13-N, 410C13-NR, 410C13-M2, and 410C13-M2R, with a recommendation that they be published for public comment. The Standing Committee unanimously approved the Advisory Committee’s recommendation with one change, discussed below, to Rule 3002.1.

Rule 3002.1 (Notice Relating to Claims Secured by Security Interest in the Debtor’s Principal Residence)

In response to suggestions submitted by the National Association of Chapter Thirteen Trustees and the American Bankruptcy Institute’s Commission on Consumer Bankruptcy, the Advisory Committee proposed amendments to Rule 3002.1 that were published for comment in 2021. The proposed amendments—intended to encourage a greater degree of compliance with the rule’s provisions—included a new midcase assessment of the mortgage claim’s status in order to give the debtor time to cure any postpetition defaults that may have occurred, new provisions concerning the effective date of late payment-change notices, and requirements concerning notice of payment changes for a home equity line of credit (“HELOC”).

Additionally, the proposed amendments would have changed the assessment of the status of the mortgage at the end of a chapter 13 case from a notice to a motion procedure that would result in a binding order.

There were 27 comments submitted in response to the proposed amendments. Many of them identified concerns about the midcase review and end-of-case procedures. The comments led the Advisory Committee to recommend several changes to the rule as published. Among those changes, the provision for giving only annual notices of HELOC changes is made optional. The proposed midcase review procedure is also made optional, can be sought at any time during the case, is done by motion rather than by notice, and can be initiated either by the debtor or the trustee, not just the trustee as initially proposed. Changes are also made to the end-of-case procedures in response to the comments, including initiating the process by notice rather than by motion from the case trustee.

In addition to the changes discussed above, the Advisory Committee also recommended changes to current Rule 3002.1(i) (which would become Rule 3002.1(h)) to clarify the scope of relief that a court may grant if a claimholder fails to provide any information required under the rule. Following concerns raised during the Standing Committee meeting, the Advisory Committee chair withdrew one aspect of those proposed changes to allow for further consideration and possible resubmission at a later time.

Because the changes to the originally published amendments are substantial, and further public input would be beneficial, the Advisory Committee sought republication of the new proposed amendments to Rule 3002.1. After the Advisory Committee chair withdrew the portion of the proposed amendments noted in the preceding paragraph concerning current Rule 3002.1(i), the Standing Committee unanimously approved for publication the remainder of the proposed amendments to Rule 3002.1.

Rule 8006 (Certifying a Direct Appeal to the Court of Appeals)

The proposed amendment to Rule 8006(g) would clarify that any party to an appeal from a bankruptcy court (not merely the appellant) may request that a court of appeals authorize a direct appeal (if the requirements for such an appeal have otherwise been met). There is no obligation to file such a request if no party wants the court of appeals to authorize a direct appeal.

Official Forms Related to Proposed Amendments to Rule 3002.1

- Official Form 410C13-M1 (Motion Under Rule 3002.1(f)(1) to Determine the Status of the Mortgage Claim),
- Official Form 410C13-M1R (Response to [Trustee's/Debtor's] Motion Under Rule 3002.1(f)(1) to Determine the Status of the Mortgage Claim),
- Official Form 410C13-N (Trustee's Notice of Payments Made),
- Official Form 410C13-NR (Response to Trustee's Notice of Payments Made),
- Official Form 410C13-M2 (Motion Under Rule 3002.1(g)(4) to Determine Final Cure and Payment of Mortgage Claim),
- Official Form 410C13-M2R (Response to [Trustee's/Debtor's] Motion to Determine Final Cure and Payment of the Mortgage Claim)

The proposed amendments to Rule 3002.1 that were published for comment in 2021 called for five Official Forms to implement the proposed procedures. As a result of its recommendation to republish proposed Rule 3002.1, and the substantial changes to the proposed procedures, the Advisory Committee now seeks publication of six proposed implementing Official Forms.

Information Items

The Advisory Committee met on March 30, 2023. In addition to the recommendations discussed above, the Advisory Committee gave preliminary consideration to a suggestion to require redaction of the entire Social Security number from filings in bankruptcy, a new suggestion to adopt national rules addressing electronic debtor signatures, changes to the timing of clerk notices of a debtor's failure to file the certificate showing completion of a personal financial management course, and a rule amendment that would require the debtor to disclose certain assets obtained after the petition date.

FEDERAL RULES OF CIVIL PROCEDURE

Rule Recommended for Approval and Transmission

The Advisory Committee on Civil Rules recommended for final approval proposed amendments to Civil Rule 12(a). The Standing Committee unanimously approved the Advisory Committee's recommendation.

Rule 12 (Defenses and Objections: When and How Presented; Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings; Consolidating Motions; Waiving Defenses; Pretrial Hearing)

Rule 12(a) prescribes the time to serve responsive pleadings. Paragraph (1) provides the general response time, but recognizes that a federal statute setting a different time governs. In contrast, neither paragraph (2) (which sets a 60-day response time for the United States, its agencies, and its officers or employees sued in an official capacity) nor paragraph (3) (which sets a 60-day response time for United States officers or employees sued in an individual capacity for acts or omissions in connection with federal duties) recognizes the possibility of conflicting statutory response times.

The current language could be read to suggest unintended preemption of statutory time directives. While it is not clear whether any statutes inconsistent with paragraph (3) exist, there are statutes setting shorter times than the 60 days provided by paragraph (2); one example is the Freedom of Information Act. The current rule fails to reflect the Advisory Committee's intent to defer to different response times set by statute. Thus, the current language could be mistakenly interpreted as a deliberate choice by the Advisory Committee that the response times set in paragraphs (2) and (3) are intended to supersede inconsistent statutory provisions, especially because paragraph (1) includes specific language deferring to different periods established by statute.

The Advisory Committee determined that an amendment to Rule 12(a) is necessary to explicitly extend to paragraphs (2) and (3) the recognition now set forth in paragraph (1)---namely, that a different response time set by statute supersedes the response times set by those rules. After public comment, the Advisory Committee recommended final approval of the rule as published.

Recommendation: That the Judicial Conference approve the proposed amendment to Civil Rule 12(a), as set forth in Appendix C, and transmit it to the Supreme Court for consideration with a recommendation that it be adopted by the Court and transmitted to Congress in accordance with the law.

Rules Approved for Publication and Comment

The Advisory Committee submitted proposed amendments to Rules 16(b)(3) (Pretrial Conferences; Scheduling; Management) and 26(f)(3) (Duty to Disclose; General Provisions Governing Discovery) and proposed new Rule 16.1 (Multidistrict Litigation) with a recommendation that they be published for public comment in August 2023. The Standing Committee unanimously approved the Advisory Committee's recommendations.

Rules 16(b)(3) (Pretrial Conferences; Scheduling; Management) and 26(f)(3) (Duty to Disclose; General Provisions Governing Discovery)

The proposed amendments would call for early identification of a method to comply with Rule 26(b)(5)(A)'s requirement that producing parties describe materials withheld on grounds of privilege or as trial-preparation materials. Specifically, the proposed amendment to Rule 26(f)(3)(D) would require the parties to address in their discovery plan the timing and method for complying with Rule 26(b)(5)(A). The proposed amendment to Rule 16(b)(3) would provide that the court may address the timing and method of such compliance in its scheduling order. During the January 2023 Standing Committee meeting, members expressed differing views concerning the length of, and level of detail in, the committee notes that would accompany the proposed amendments. The Advisory Committee subsequently reexamined the notes in light of that discussion, and at the June 2023 Standing Committee meeting, the Advisory Committee presented shortened notes to accompany the proposed amendments.

New Rule 16.1 (Multidistrict Litigation)

Proposed new Rule 16.1 is designed to provide a framework for the initial management of multidistrict litigation (MDL) proceedings, which the Civil Rules do not expressly address. After several years of work by its MDL Subcommittee, extensive discussions with interested bar groups, and consideration of multiple drafts, the Advisory Committee unanimously recommended that new Rule 16.1 be published for public comment.

Rule 16.1(a) recognizes that the transferee judge regularly schedules an initial MDL management conference soon after transfer. An initial MDL management conference allows for early attention to matters identified in Rule 16.1(c), which may be of great value to the transferee judge and the parties. Because not all MDL proceedings present the same type of management challenges, there may be some MDL proceedings in which no initial management conference is needed, so proposed new Rule 16.1(a) says that the transferee court “should” (not “must”) schedule such a conference.

Rule 16.1(b) recognizes that the transferee judge may designate coordinating counsel---before the appointment of leadership counsel—for the initial MDL conference. The court may appoint coordinating counsel to ensure effective and coordinated discussion and to provide an informative report.

Rule 16.1(c) encourages the court to order the parties to submit a report prior to the initial MDL conference. The court may order that the report address, inter alia, any matter under Rules 16.1(c)(1)–(12) or Rule 16. The rule provides a series of prompts for the court to consider, identifying matters that are often important to the management of MDL proceedings, including (1) whether to appoint leadership counsel; (2) previously entered scheduling or other orders; (3) principal factual and legal issues; (4) exchange of information about factual bases for claims and defenses; (5) consolidated pleadings; (6) a discovery plan; (7) pretrial motions; (8) additional management conferences; (9) settlement; (10) new actions in the MDL proceeding; (11) related actions in other courts; and (12) referral of matters to a magistrate judge or master.

Rule 16.1(d) provides for an initial MDL management order, which the court should enter after the initial MDL management conference. The order should address matters the court designates under Rule 16.1(c) and may address other matters in the court’s discretion. This order controls the MDL proceedings until modified.

Information Items

The Advisory Committee met on March 28, 2023. In addition to the matters discussed above, the Advisory Committee discussed various information items, including potential amendments to Rule 7.1 (Disclosure Requirement) regarding disclosure of possible grounds for recusal, Rule 23 (Class Actions) regarding awards to class representatives in class actions and the superiority requirement for class certification, Rule 28 (Persons Before Whom Depositions May Be Taken) regarding cross-border discovery, Rule 41(a) (Dismissal of Actions) regarding the dismissal of some but not all claims or parties, and Rule 45(b)(1) (Subpoena) regarding methods for serving a subpoena. The Advisory Committee also discussed issues related to sealed filings, the standards for in forma pauperis status, and the mandatory initial discovery pilot project.

FEDERAL RULES OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE

Information Items

The Advisory Committee on Criminal Rules met on April 20, 2023. The Advisory Committee considered several information items.

The Advisory Committee continues to consider a New York City Bar Association suggestion concerning Rule 17 (Subpoena). On issues related to third-party subpoenas, the Advisory Committee has heard from a number of experienced attorneys, including defense lawyers in private practice, federal defenders, and representatives of the Department of Justice. Through its Rule 17 Subcommittee, the Advisory Committee has collected information from experts regarding the Stored Communications Act and other issues relating to materials held online, as well as issues affecting banks and other financial service entities.

A new proposal from the American College of Trial Lawyers would allow the defendant to waive trial by jury without the government's consent. The Advisory Committee discussed this proposal and its previous consideration of this issue in connection with deliberations over new Criminal Rule 62 (part of the set of proposed rules—currently on track to take effect December 1, 2023, absent contrary action by Congress—that resulted from the CARES Act directive that rules be considered to address future emergencies).

Finally, the Advisory Committee voted to remove two items from its study agenda: a suggestion to clarify Rule 11(a)(2), which governs conditional pleas, and a suggestion to amend Rule 11(a)(1) to provide for a plea of not guilty by reason of insanity.

FEDERAL RULES OF EVIDENCE

Rules Recommended for Approval and Transmission

The Advisory Committee on Evidence Rules recommended for final approval proposed amendments to Evidence Rules 613, 801, 804, and 1006, and new Evidence Rule 107. The Standing Committee unanimously approved the Advisory Committee’s recommendations with minor changes to the text of Rules 107, 804, and 1006, and minor changes to the committee notes accompanying Rules 107, 801, 804, and 1006.

New Rule 107 (Illustrative Aids)

The distinction between “demonstrative evidence” (admitted into evidence and used substantively to prove disputed issues at trial) and “illustrative aids” (not admitted into evidence but used solely to assist the trier of fact in understanding evidence) is sometimes a difficult one to draw, and the standards for allowing the use of an illustrative aid are not made clear in the case law, in part because there is no specific rule that sets any standards. The proposed amendment, originally published for public comment as a new subsection of Rule 611, would provide standards for illustrative aids, allowing them to be used at trial after the court balances the utility of the aid against the risk of unfair prejudice, confusion, and delay. Following publication in August 2022, the Advisory Committee determined that the contents of the rule were better contained in a new Rule 107 rather than a new subsection of Rule 611, reasoning that Article VI is about witnesses, and illustrative aids are often used outside the context of witness testimony. In addition, the Advisory Committee determined to remove the notice requirement from the published version of the proposed amendment and to extend the rule to cover opening and closing statements. Finally, the Advisory Committee changed the proposed amendments to provide that illustrative aids can be used unless the negative factors “substantially” outweigh the educative value of the aid, to make clear that illustrative aids are not evidence, and to refer to Rule 1006 for summaries of voluminous evidence.

Rule 613 (Witness’s Prior Statement)

The proposed amendment would provide that extrinsic evidence of a prior inconsistent statement is not admissible until the witness is given an opportunity to explain or deny the statement. To allow flexibility, the amended rule would give the court the discretion to dispense with the requirement. The proposed amendment would bring the courts into uniformity, and would adopt the approach that treats the witness fairly and promotes efficiency.

Rule 801 (Definitions That Apply to This Article; Exclusions from Hearsay)

The proposed amendment to Rule 801(d)(2) would resolve the dispute in the courts about the admissibility of statements by the predecessor-in-interest of a party-opponent, providing that such a hearsay statement would be admissible against the declarant’s successor-in-interest. The Advisory Committee reasoned that admissibility is fair when the successor-in-interest is standing in the shoes of the declarant because the declarant is in substance the party-opponent.

Rule 804 (Exceptions to the Rule Against Hearsay—When the Declarant Is Unavailable as a Witness)

Rule 804(b)(3) provides a hearsay exception for declarations against interest. In a criminal case in which a declaration against penal interest is offered, the rule requires that the proponent provide “corroborating circumstances that clearly indicate the trustworthiness” of the statement. There is a dispute in the courts about the meaning of the “corroborating circumstances” requirement. The proposed amendments to Rule 804(b)(3) would require that, in assessing whether a statement is supported by corroborating circumstances, the court must consider not only the totality of the circumstances under which the statement was made, but also any evidence supporting or undermining it. This proposed amendment would help maintain consistency with the 2019 amendment to Rule 807, which requires courts to look at corroborating evidence, if any, in determining whether a hearsay statement is sufficiently trustworthy under the residual exception.

Rule 1006 (Summaries to Prove Content)

The proposed amendments to Rule 1006 would fit together with the proposed new Rule 107 on illustrative aids. The proposed rule amendment and new rule would serve to distinguish a summary of voluminous evidence (which summary is itself evidence and is governed by Rule 1006) from a summary that is designed to help the trier of fact understand admissible evidence (which summary is not itself evidence and would be governed by new Rule 107). The proposed amendment to Rule 1006 would also clarify that a Rule 1006 summary is admissible whether or not the underlying evidence has been admitted.

Recommendation: That the Judicial Conference approve the proposed amendments to Evidence Rules 613, 801, 804, and 1006, and new Rule 107, as set forth in Appendix D, and transmit them to the Supreme Court for consideration with a recommendation that they be adopted by the Court and transmitted to Congress in accordance with the law.

Information Items

The Advisory Committee on Evidence Rules met on April 28, 2023. In addition to the matters discussed above, the Advisory Committee discussed possible amendments to add a new subdivision to Rule 611 (Mode and Order of Examining Witnesses and Presenting Evidence) to address permitting jurors to submit questions for witnesses. Proposed amendments setting forth the minimum safeguards that should be applied if a trial court decided to allow jurors to submit questions for witnesses were under consideration for some time, but doubts about the practice of allowing jurors to submit questions for witnesses led the Advisory Committee to table any possible proposed amendments. The Advisory Committee referred the issue to the committee updating the Benchbook for U.S. District Court Judges, and it is being considered for inclusion in the Benchbook.

JUDICIARY STRATEGIC PLANNING

The Standing Committee approved a brief report on the strategic initiatives that the Committee is pursuing to implement the Strategic Plan for the Federal Judiciary. The Committee's views were communicated to Chief Judge Scott Coogler (N.D. Ala.), judiciary planning coordinator.

Rule	Summary of Proposal	Related or Coordinated Amendments
CV 6	The technical proposed amendment adds “Juneteenth National Independence Day” to the list of legal holidays.	AP 26, AP 45, BR 9006, CR 45, and CR 56
CV 15	The proposed amendment to Rule 15(a)(1) is intended to remove the possibility for a literal reading of the existing rule to create an unintended gap. A literal reading of “A party may amend its pleading once as a matter of course within ... 21 days after service of a responsive pleading or [pre-answer motion]” would suggest that the Rule 15(a)(1)(B) period does not commence until the service of the responsive pleading or pre-answer motion – with the unintended result that there could be a gap period (beginning on the 22nd day after service of the pleading and extending to service of the responsive pleading or pre-answer motion) within which amendment as of right is not permitted. The proposed amendment would preclude this interpretation by replacing the word “within” with “no later than.”
CV 72	The proposed amendment would replace the requirement that the magistrate judge’s findings and recommendations be mailed to the parties with a requirement that a copy be served on the parties as provided in Rule 5(b).
CV 87 (New)	Proposed new rule developed in response to § 15002(b)(6) of the CARES Act, which directs that the Judicial Conference and the Supreme Court consider rules amendments to address emergency measures that may be taken by the courts when the President declares a national emergency.	AP 2, BK 9038, and CR 62
CR 16	The technical proposed amendment corrects a typographical error in the cross reference under (b)(1)(C)(v).
CR 45	The technical proposed amendment adds “Juneteenth National Independence Day” to the list of legal holidays.	AP 26, AP 45, BR 9006, CV 6, and CR 56
CR 56	The technical proposed amendment adds “Juneteenth National Independence Day” to the list of legal holidays.	AP 26, AP 45, BR 9006, CV 6, and CR 45
CR 62 (New)	Proposed new rule developed in response to § 15002(b)(6) of the CARES Act, which directs that the Judicial Conference and the Supreme Court consider rules amendments to address emergency measures that may be taken by the courts when the President declares a national emergency.	AP 2, BK 9038, and CV 87
EV 106	The proposed amendment would allow a completing statement to be admissible over a hearsay objection and cover unrecorded oral statements.

Rule	Summary of Proposal	Related or Coordinated Amendments
EV 615	The proposed amendment limits an exclusion order to the exclusion of witnesses from the courtroom. A new subdivision would provide that the court has discretion to issue further orders to “(1) prohibit disclosure of trial testimony to witnesses who are excluded from the courtroom; and (2) prohibit excluded witnesses from accessing trial testimony.” Finally, the proposed amendment clarifies that the existing provision that allows an entity-party to designate “an officer or employee” to be exempt from exclusion is limited to one officer or employee.
EV 702	The proposed amendment would amend Rule 702(d) to require the court to find that “the expert’s opinion reflects a reliable application of the principles and methods to the facts of the case.” In addition, the proposed amendment would explicitly add the preponderance of the evidence standard to Rule 702(b)–(d).

Rule	Summary of Proposal	Related or Coordinated Amendments
AP 32	Conforming proposed amendment to subdivision (g) to reflect the proposed consolidation of Rules 35 and 40.	AP 35, 40
AP 35	The proposed amendment would transfer the contents of the rule to Rule 40 to consolidate the rules for panel rehearings and rehearings en banc together in a single rule.	AP 40
AP 40	The proposed amendments address panel rehearings and rehearings en banc together in a single rule, consolidating what had been separate provisions in Rule 35 (hearing and rehearing en banc) and Rule 40 (panel rehearing). The contents of Rule 35 would be transferred to Rule 40, which is expanded to address both panel rehearing and en banc determination.	AP 35
Appendix: Length Limits	Conforming proposed amendments would reflect the proposed consolidation of Rules 35 and 40 and specify that the limits apply to a petition for initial hearing en banc and any response, if requested by the court.	AP 35, 40
BK 1007(b)(7) and related amendments	The proposed amendment to Rule 1007(b)(7) would require a debtor to submit the course certificate from the debtor education requirement in the Bankruptcy Code. Conforming amendments would be made to the following rules by replacing the word “statement” with “certificate”: Rules 1007(c)(4), 4004(c)(1)(H), 4004(c)(4), 5009(b), 9006(b)(3) and 9006(c)(2).
BK 7001	The proposed amendment would exempt from the list of adversary proceedings in Rule 7001, “a proceeding by an individual debtor to recover tangible personal property under § 542(a).”
BK 8023.1 (new)	This would be a new rule on the substitution of parties modeled on FRAP 43. Neither FRAP 43 nor Fed. R. Civ. P. 25 is applicable to parties in bankruptcy appeals to the district court or bankruptcy appellate panel, and this new rule is intended to fill that gap.	AP 43
BK Restyled Rules	The third and final set of current Bankruptcy Rules, consisting of Parts VII-IX, are restyled to provide greater clarity, consistency, and conciseness without changing practice and procedure. The first set of restyled rules (Parts I & II) were published in 2020, and the second set (Parts III-VI) were published in 2021. The full set of restyled rules is expected to go into effect no earlier than December 1, 2024.
CV 12	The proposed amendment would clarify that a federal statute setting a different time should govern as to the entire rule, not just to subdivision (a).
EV 107	The proposed amendment was published for public comment as new Rule 611(d), but is now new Rule 107.	EV 1006

EV 613	The proposed amendment would require that, prior to the introduction of extrinsic evidence of a witness’s prior inconsistent statement, the witness receive an opportunity to explain or deny the statement.
EV 801	The proposed amendment to paragraph (d)(2) would provide that when a party stands in the shoes of a declarant or declarant’s principal, hearsay statements made by the declarant or declarant’s principal are admissible against the party.
EV 804	The proposed amendment to subparagraph (b)(3)(B) would provide that when assessing whether a statement is supported by corroborating circumstances that clearly indicate its trustworthiness, the court must consider the totality of the circumstances and evidence, if any, corroborating the statement.
EV 1006	The proposed changes would permit a properly supported summary to be admitted into evidence whether or not the underlying voluminous materials have been admitted. The proposed changes would also clarify that illustrative aids not admitted under Rule 1006 are governed by proposed new Rule 107.	EV 107

Rule	Summary of Proposal	Related or Coordinated Amendments
AP 6	The proposed amendments would address resetting the time to appeal in cases where a district court is exercising original jurisdiction in a bankruptcy case by adding a sentence to Appellate Rule 6(a) to provide that the reference in Rule 4(a)(4)(A) to the time allowed for motions under certain Federal Rules of Civil Procedure must be read as a reference to the time allowed for the equivalent motions under the applicable Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure. In addition, the proposed amendments would make Rule 6(c) largely self-contained rather than relying on Rule 5 and would provide more detail on how parties should handle procedural steps in the court of appeals.	BK 8006
AP 39	The proposed amendments would provide that the allocation of costs by the court of appeals applies to both the costs taxable in the court of appeals and the costs taxable in the district court. In addition, the proposed amendments would provide a clearer procedure that a party should follow if it wants to request that the court of appeals to reconsider the allocation of costs.
BK 3002.1 and Official Forms 410C13-M1, 410C13-M1R, 410C13-N, 410C13-NR, 410C13-M2, and 410C13-M2R	Previously published in 2001. Like the prior publication, the 2023 republished amendments to the rule are intended to encourage a greater degree of compliance with the rule’s provisions. A proposed midcase assessment of the mortgage status would no longer be mandatory notice process brought by the trustee but can instead be initiated by motion at any time, and more than once, by the debtor or the trustee. A proposed provision for giving only annual notices HELOC changes was also made optional. Also, the proposed end-of-case review procedures were changed in response to comments from a motion to notice procedure. Finally, proposed changes to 3002.1(i), redesignated as 3002.1(j) are meant to clarify the scope of relief that a court may grant if a claimholder fails to provide any of the information required under the rule. Six new Official Forms would implement aspect of the rule.
BK 8006	The proposed amendment to Rule 8006(g) would clarify that any party to an appeal from a bankruptcy court (not merely the appellant) may request that a court of appeals authorize a direct appeal (if the requirements for such an appeal have otherwise been met). There is no obligation to file such a request if no party wants the court of appeals to authorize a direct appeal.	AP 6
Official Form 410	The proposed amendment would change the last line of Part 1, Box 3 to permit use of the uniform claim identifier for all payments in cases filed under all chapters of the Code, not merely electronic payments in chapter 13 cases. If approved, the amended form would go into effect December 1, 2024.

The proposed amendments would call for development early in the litigation of a method for complying with Civil Rule 26(b)(5)(A)’s requirement that producing parties describe materials withheld on grounds of privilege or as trial-preparation materials.	CV 26
CV 16.1 (new)	The proposed new rule would provide the framework for the initial management of an MDL proceeding by the transferee judge. DRAFT MINUTES
CIVIL RULES ADVISORY COMMITTEE
March 28, 2023

1 The Civil Rules Advisory Committee met on March 28, 2023, in West Palm Beach, Florida.
2 Participants included Judge Robin Rosenberg (Advisory Committee Chair) and Judge John Bates
3 (Standing Committee Chair), Advisory Committee members Justice Jane Bland; Judge Cathy
4 Bissoon; Judge Jennifer Boal; Brian Boynton; David Burman; Chief Judge David Godbey
5 (remotely); Judge Kent Jordan; Judge M. Hannah Lauck; Judge R. David Proctor; Joseph Sellers;
6 Judge Manish Shah; Dean Benjamin Spencer; Ariana Tadler; and Helen Witt. Professor Richard 7 Marcus participated (remotely) as Reporter, Professor Andrew Bradt as Associate Reporter, and 8 Professor Cooper as Consultant. Also representing the Standing Committee were Judge D. Brooks
9 Smith, Liaison to this committee (remotely) Professor Catherine Struve, Reporter to the Standing
10 Committee (remotely); and Professor Daniel Coquillette, Consultant to the Standing Committee
11 (remotely). Representing the Bankruptcy Rules Committee was Judge Catherine McEwen, liaison
12 to this committee. Carmelita Shinn, clerk liaison, also participated. The Department of Justice was 13 also represented by Joshua Gardner. The Administrative Office was represented by H. Thomas Byron 14 III; Allison Bruff; Christopher Pryby; and Scott Myers (remotely). The Federal Judicial Center was 15 represented by Dr. Emery Lee; Jason Cantone (remotely); and Timothy Reagan (remotely); Darcie 16 Thompson, law clerk to Judge Rosenberg, and Supreme Court Fellow Brad Baranowski also 17 attended.

18 Susan Steinman of the American Association for Justice, Alex Dahl of Lawyers for Civil 19 Justice, and Robert Levy of Exxon Corp. and Kyle Cutts and Gil Keteltas of Baker Hostetler
20 attended in person. Members of the public also joined the meeting remotely. They are identified in 21 the attached attendance list.

22 Judge Rosenberg opened the meeting by noting that this was her first meeting as Chair. She 23 noted that she aspired to continue the great tradition set most recently by Judges Bates and Dow, the 24 immediate past chairs of this Committee.

New Committee Members and Associate Reporter

26 Judge Rosenberg introduced two newly-appointed members of the Committee. First, Justice
27 Jane Bland of the Texas Supreme Court has joined the Committee. She has been a Justice of that 28 court since 2019 and was previously on the Texas Court of Appeals, and before that served as a
29 district court judge in the Texas state courts. She has abundant rulemaking experience, having served 30 for 21 years on the Texas Rules Committee.

31 Judge Manish Shah of the Northern District of Illinois graduated from Stanford and then the 32 University of Chicago Law School. He then worked for a San Francisco law firm before serving as 33 law clerk to Judge James Zagel of the Northern District of Illinois. After his law clerk service, he 34 was an Assistant U.S. Attorney in the N.D. Ill. for 12 years, the last two years as Chief of the 35 Criminal Division.

36 Judge Rosenberg then introduced Professor Andrew Bradt, the new Associate Reporter of 37 the Committee. He is a Professor of Law at the University of California, Berkeley, where he has won
38 law school and campus-wide teaching awards. He is also co-author of casebooks on Civil Procedure
39 and Complex Litigation. And he is Faculty Director of the Berkeley Law Civil Justice Institute.
40 Before entering full-time teaching, he served as law clerk to Judge Patti Saris (D.Mass.), practiced
41 at Ropes & Gray and at Jones Day, and served as a Climenko Teaching Fellow at Harvard Law 42 School.

Standing Committee January meeting

44 Judge Rosenberg then reported on the Standing Committee meeting in January 2023. Much 45 of the meeting focused on work done by other advisory committees. For this Committee, there were

46 three areas of interest:

47 (1) The Rule 42 Consolidation Subcommittee, a joint subcommittee of the Civil and 48 Appellate Rules Advisory Committees (sometimes call the Hall v. Hall Committee) was disbanded.
49 This committee was formed after the Supreme Court’s decision in Hall v. Hall, 138 S.Ct. 1118
50 (2018), holding that even after separate cases have been consolidated a final judgment in one of them
51 is immediately appealable even though the other case or cases remain pending in the district court.
52 The Court recognized in its decision that a rule change could alter the result it reached, which 53 resolved a circuit conflict. A very substantial research effort by FJC Research, after overcoming 54 considerable obstacles, showed that there had not been significant problems under the rule
55 announced by the Court, and that there was no significant indication that a rule change was needed.
56 Consequently, the subcommittee was disbanded.

57 (2) The proposed privilege log amendments to Rules 16(b)(3) and 26(f)(3) were presented 58 to the Standing Committee. That committee did not have a problem with the small changes in the 59 rules themselves, but had misgivings about the length of the draft Committee Notes in relation the 60 minor changes in the rules. One concern was that these Notes were verging on being a practice 61 manual rather than explaining how the amendments were to function. The decision was to return the 62 privilege log package to the Advisory Committee to consider shortening the Note, and the Discovery
63 Subcommittee had since January agreed on a shorter Note that is before the full Committee today.

64 (3) The third topic presented to the Standing Committee in January was the MDL package.
65 That generated substantial discussion at the Standing Committee meeting, and is an important part 66 of today’s agenda. So detailed discussion can be deferred until that point in the agenda.

67 Judicial Conference Meeting, March 2023

68 Judge Rosenberg also noted that the agenda book contains a report submitted to the Judicial 69 Conference for its March 2023 meeting. It is included for information purposes only. It notes the 70 matters now under study by this Committee.

71 Minutes for October 2022 Meeting

72 The agenda book also contains the draft minutes for the Advisory Committee’s October 2022 73 meeting. The draft was approved without dissent, subject to correction of typographical or similar 74 errors.

75 Rule 12(a) -- Recommending adoption

76 A small amendment to Rule 12(a) was published for public comment in August 2022. It was 77 introduced as correcting a seeming oversight in the rule that suggested the rule altered statutes that 78 call for the government to respond in fewer than 60 days (the time specified for the government to 79 file its answer under Rules 12(a)(2) and (3)). The prime example is the Freedom of Information Act, 80 and the Committee was informed that the existing rule had caused problems in some FOIA cases.
81 The amendment sought to cure this problem by amending the provision formerly limited to Rule
82 12(a)(1) so it applies to the entirety of Rule 12(a), including the times that apply to the government,
83 and the Note made clear that this would invoke a statute that provided another time -- whether 84 shorter or longer -- in place of the time provisions of the rule itself.

85 Only three comments were submitted. One (submitted by Anonymous) supported the 86 amendment, and another objected that the rule had been “disregarded” in favor of the State of 87 Indiana in a prior litigation. The Federal Magistrate Judges Association supported the amendment

88 but noted that there might be other rules that might specify a different time. The FMJA did not 89 identify any such rules, but a comment during the meeting noted that Rule 15(a)(3) calls for 90 responding to an amended pleading within 14 days, which might be affected. Rule 15(a) was not 91 exempted by the current rule, however, and no problems under that rule had been identified (as with 92 the FOIA cases). Moreover, this possible change could be said to go beyond the published draft 93 amendment.

94 On motion, the amendment was approved for recommendation that the Standing Committee
95 forward it to the Judicial Conference for adoption, with one dissent.

96 Privilege Logs
97 Rules 16(b)(3) and 26(f)(3)

98 As already noted, the Standing Committee returned the proposed amendments to the 99 Advisory Committee with a request to consider shortening the Note. No questions were raised about 100 the rule amendments themselves.

101 Chief Judge David Godbey, Chair of the Discovery Subcommittee, reported that the 102 Subcommittee had met by email on a number of occasions to craft a punchier Note. After 103 considerable wordsmithing, the Subcommittee agreed to a revised and shortened Note, which is 104 included in the agenda book. It urges that the draft rule amendments, along with the shortened Notes, 105 but published for public comment.

106 In addition, after the Standing Committee meeting, Judge Facciola and Mr. Redgrave
107 submitted a proposal for an amendment to Rule 26(b)(5)(A), where the requirement to specify what 108 has been withheld on grounds of privilege appears. The Subcommittee does not recommend making 109 this additional rule change.

110 A Subcommittee member commented in support of the amendment, but expressed worries
111 that the parties might often find it difficult to devise a specific method of complying with Rule 112 26(b)(5)(A) as early in the case as when the Rule 26(f) conference occurs. The idea is that this should 113 be “the beginning of the process” in many instances.

114 A reaction was that one can “almost always” make later revisions to any early arrangements
115 of this sort in light of developments. And it was repeatedly emphasized as the Subcommittee studied 116 the problem that early attention was critical. Deferring serious consideration of the method of 117 satisfying Rule 26(b)(5)(A) until the end of the discovery period could produce major problems.

118 A question was raised about the suggestion from Judge Facciola and Mr. Redgrave. Why not 119 make that change? An answer was that the rule amendment calls for discussion during the Rule 26(f)
120 meet-and-confer session, so the best place to put that is in Rule 26(f). Presumably that is where 121 people would look to find out what they should do during the meet-and-confer session. Telling them 122 the same thing in Rule 26(b)(5)(A) seems redundant.

123 The Committee voted unanimously to recommend that the revised amendment package be 124 published for public comment.

125 MDL Subcommittee -- Rule 16.1

126 Judge Rosenberg introduced this matter by noting that this subcommittee may have set a 127 record for longevity for Advisory Committee subcommittees. The task has lasted more than four 128 years and has ranged through a multitude of issues. Much time was spent on whether to move

129 forward with special rules for interlocutory appellate review in MDL proceedings. Considerable 130 additional time was devoted to study of third party litigation funding. Aggressive “vetting” proposals 131 were also made, sometimes calling for plaintiffs to submit “evidentiary” materials at the outset of 132 litigation to validate their claims.

133 For some time (up until when the Advisory Committee’s agenda book for the March 2022 134 meeting was prepared), the focus was on Rules 26(f) and 16(b), the same rules addressed in the 135 Discovery Subcommittee privilege log proposals. But eventually it became clear (a) that Rule 26(f)
136 was not entirely suitable as a vehicle because it is addressed to individual actions, and (b) that a 137 special feature -- appointment of “coordinating counsel” -- might be important to assist in the 138 organization of the meet-and-confer session that could produce a report for the court to assist in the 139 management of MDL proceedings.

140 After the Advisory Committee’s March 2022 meeting, an initial sketch of a possible Rule
141 16.1 was prepared, using two alternatives. The first included a list of specifics very much like the 142 one being presented to this committee. The second alternative was more general. This sketch was 143 included in the Standing Committee agenda book for its June 2022 meeting as a purely informational
144 item. It was later the focus of very useful meetings with members of the Lawyers for Civil Justice 145 and the American Association for Justice attended by members of the Subcommittee.

146 In addition, as reported during the October 2022 meeting of this Committee, representatives
147 of the Subcommittee would be attending the transferee judges conference hosted by the Judicial 148 Panel on Multidistrict Litigation at the end of October 2022. The Panel was very helpful to the 149 Subcommittee during that event. There was a session of the entire conference devoted to the Rule
150 16.1 ideas, and at the end of the conference also a special breakout session for in-depth discussion
151 of the 16.1 ideas. During that session in particular, the transferee judges expressed a distinct 152 preference for the Alternative 1 approach -- including more specifics. Such a rule could provide 153 valuable guidance, particularly to judges new to the MDL process, and to lawyers without substantial
154 prior experience. In addition, it could tee up a variety of topics that can beneficially be considered 155 at the outset of MDL proceedings.

156 Judge Proctor continued the introduction of the Rule 16.1 proposal. He noted that he had 157 been Chair of the Subcommittee only since last November -- the third Chair for this Subcommittee
158 (perhaps also a record). He recalled an early presentation during the Judicial Panel’s 2018 transferee
159 judges conference about the possibility of amending the Civil Rules to address MDL proceedings.
160 At that time he was a member of the Panel, and was personally skeptical about the rule amendment
161 ideas, particularly given the topics then under discussion, including expanded interlocutory appeals 162 and “vetting” requirements. Many other transferee judges were similarly resistant to these 163 amendment ideas during the 2018 conference.

164 He also attended the sessions at the Panel’s 2022 transferee judges conference and found the 165 sessions very helpful in crystallizing what emerged as strong support among the judges for the 166 Alternative 1 approach. Support even came from a number of judges who had been opposed to rule 167 amendments during the 2018 conference. Indeed, one very experienced transferee judge remarked 168 that he had become a “convert” to favoring this new approach to addressing MDL proceedings in 169 the Civil Rules.

170 With this background, the Subcommittee set to work. The Subcommittee members were 171 indefatigable. There may have been as many as ten meetings, and unless they were ill or out of the 172 country all members showed up for and participated in these meetings. There was a collective effort
173 to take account of the comments received from the sources mentioned above, and from other sources
174 that the very experienced members of the Subcommittee have consulted.

175 The basic concept is to give the transferee judge a set of prompts that can provide a valuable
176 starting point for successful management of an MDL proceeding. In a sense, the rule offers the judge
177 a “cafeteria plan” to direct counsel to provide needed input up front without constricting the judge’s
178 flexibility in tailoring the management order to the needs of the specific proceeding.

179 As recognized in the rule and Note, there may be some MDL proceedings that do not need
180 as much detail or management as the larger ones. But a consistent message through the long 181 consideration of these issues is that almost all transferee judges convene an initial management 182 conference to develop a plan.

183 Turning to the structure of the 16.1 draft, Judge Proctor noted that this is about the initial 184 management conference, though it foresees that ordinarily there will be further conferences to 185 monitor the proceedings and adapt to developments. Rule 16.1(b) authorizes appointment of 186 “coordinating counsel” to assist in the preparation and organization of a meet-and-confer session
187 under Rule 16.1(c) and in the preparation of the report to the court before the Rule 16.1(a) initial 188 management conference. Such a designation might be likened to having to “herd cats,” but it is 189 something that may provide important value to the court.

190 A concern repeatedly raised during meetings with bar groups and in submissions to the 191 Committee might be called a “chicken/egg” problem -- how can all the topics on which the meet-192 and-confer session is to focus be addressed meaningfully before leadership is appointed (assuming 193 there is to be an appointment of leadership counsel -- one of the proposed topics of the meet-and-194 confer session). But the scheme is not to insist that all these matters be immediately set in concrete.
195 Indeed, Rule 16.1(d) says the initial case management order governs only “until” it is modified. A 196 key objective is to maintain flexibility while also providing guidance and identifying issues that 197 might cause great difficulty later unless brought to the surface near the outset.

198 Rule 16.1(c) provides the “cafeteria” menu, and leaves it entirely to the judge to pick the 199 topics that the parties must discuss and address in their report. The rule does not require that they 200 agree on how to handle these matters, but the reporting function at least equips the judge to 201 appreciate the various positions (sometimes, perhaps, involving disagreements among plaintiff 202 counsel or defense counsel and not only between the two “sides”).

203 Turning to some of the specifics, (c)(4) introduces the question of what was originally called 204 “vetting.” Some say the § 1407 process is not primarily designed to weed out groundless claims, but 205 that is not so. The statute is indeed designed to deal with the “forest” more than individual trees, and 206 in some instances there may be a cross-cutting issues that should be considered first. General
207 causation, preemption, and Daubert issues might be examples of that sort of issue. It may often be 208 that individual specifics are best deferred until remand to the transferor district. But in some MDL 209 proceedings, early requirements for disclosure of information about specific claims can be important.
210 Indeed, the frequent use of plaintiff fact sheets or the census methods introduced recently
211 demonstrate that such methods are often important, particularly in MDL proceedings with hundreds 212 or thousands of actions.

213 Another topic that has received much attention is settlement, and particularly the judicial role 214 in connection with possible settlement of some of these individual cases. Settlement issues are 215 different in MDL proceedings from class actions. Rule 23 authorizes the judge to appoint class
216 counsel, and also authorizes the judge to approve a settlement presented by class counsel even over 217 class member objections. In MDL proceedings, most plaintiffs have their own attorneys, and 218 settlement is an individual decision made by individual parties. The Note makes that clear, and that 219 is an important point.

220 Nevertheless, the court has a role to play in regard to settlement. For one thing (as recognized 221 by proposed 16.1(c)(1)(C)), it is common for leadership (if appointed) to have prominent role in 222 regard to settlement, at least when settlement involves resolution of multiple cases. Since the court 223 appoints leadership (and may restrict the activities of nonleadership counsel -- see proposed 224 16.1(c)(1)(E)) there is a potential oversight role for the court.

225 Beyond that, whether or not leadership counsel are appointed, proposed 16.1(c)(9) draws 226 attention to measures the court can take to facilitate settlement. Rule 16(a)(5) already recognizes that 227 “facilitating settlement” is one purpose for pretrial conferences in general, and proposed 16.1 builds 228 on that foundation.

229 Some have called attention to the Manual for Complex Litigation as a valuable source for 230 guidance for transferee judges. And it certainly is a wonderful source of guidance, though by now 231 nearly 20 years old. But it is also about 900 pages long and may not be easily digested by a judge (or 232 lawyer) newly introduced into MDL proceedings. The Panel has been consciously reaching out to 233 involve more judges in this process. And not all judges have an extensive background in complex 234 civil litigation; for example, some may come to the bench with more experience in criminal cases.
235 Transferee judges are also making efforts to involve attorneys in leadership who have not previously 236 had extensive MDL experience. The draft Committee Note recognizes the importance of care in 237 designation of leadership counsel, including a variety of experiences for potential appointees. For 238 those new to the MDL process, the Manual may be daunting to contemplate up front. And the draft 239 Note calls attention to the Manual as a source of guidance.

240 So 16.1 is not designed to supplant the Manual, but instead to provide a valuable starting
241 point for the court and the attorneys. 16.1 is not even for every MDL, though it is probably quite rare
242 for an MDL proceeding to be so simple that an initial management conference is unnecessary. The 243 draft Note recognizes that, and that matters identified in 16.1(c) may be important also in actions
244 concentrated before a single district judge without an MDL assignment, as by a related case 245 provision in local rules.

246 In conclusion, many of the particulars included in proposed 16.1(c) are features of particular 247 importance in MDL proceedings, and particularly in the larger ones that have assumed such 248 prominence in recent years. The “cafeteria” process is designed to equip the judge to be able to 249 manage the action successfully, something that often depends on getting a good start.

250 A Subcommittee member began the discussion by emphasizing that the proposal was the 251 product of great effort and care -- ten meetings and many, many emails. The Subcommittee spent 252 lots of time on many issues and was very careful about wording. Regarding the Manual for Complex
253 Litigation, it might be that completion of a new edition and final adoption of a new Rule 16.1 could 254 be seen as something of a race. The Enabling Act process takes several years, and the completion 255 of a new edition of the Manual would also likely take several years.

256 Turning to the draft rule, this member noted that the goal was to be as flexible as possible.
257 And the messages in the Committee Note are meant to be used to interpret and implement the rule’s 258 provisions. As with the 2015 amendments to the discovery rules, the rule and Note work hand in 259 hand.

260 A judge raised several questions:

261 (1) The title is “Multidistrict Litigation Management,” but the rule seems almost entirely
262 addressed to the “initial” management conference. In the same vein, in line 291, the term 263 “MDL” should be moved before “management” for consistency. It was agreed that this 264 change in line 291 is needed.

265 (2) It may be that draft 16.1(c)(4) is too strong, as it assumes that this information exchange
266 should occur in every MDL even though the Note says that some MDLs don't call for this 267 process. That seems to be in tension.

268 (3) In the Note to 16.1(b), in line 364, it seems that the reference should be to the 16.1(a) 269 conference, for that is the conference on which the rule focuses, not the 16.1(c) meet-and-270 confer. The resolution might best be to make it clear in line 364 that the meet-and-confer 271 session is what's meant.

272 (4) In regard to 16.1(c)(12), the Note seems to insist that any appointment of a master be 273 done in strict compliance with Rule 53. Yet it seems that creative judges sometimes use 274 masters in other ways in some MDL proceedings. Was it meant to disapprove that activity?

275 (5) The discussion of settlement in 16.1(c)(1)(C) and 16.1(c)(9) seems not entirely consistent.
276 Moreover, the Note at lines 415-26 seems to authorize the court to pass on the "fairness" of 277 any settlement. Is that suitable to MDL proceedings? In lines 501-05, the Note appears to 278 direct the court to ensure that any proposed settlement process "has integrity." If that is a
279 direction to the court, should it be in the rule? And does the court have that authority in MDL 280 proceedings, where judicial approval of settlements is not required?

281 (6) In the Note to 16.1(c)(6), about a discovery plan, there is a reference to 16.1(c)(11), 282 which is about related actions in other courts. What does that mean?

283 An immediate reaction was that these are very important questions. As to the last question,
284 the point was that duplicative or overlapping discovery resulting from the pendency of overlapping 285 proceedings was to be avoided, if possible. That could be a goal of the "coordination" that 286 16.1(c)(11) addresses.

287 An additional reaction was that the rule really looks beyond the initial management
288 conference. For one thing, 16.1(c)(8) says that there probably should be a schedule for further such 289 management conferences. And the Note (lines 490-91) says that "courts generally conduct 290 management conferences throughout the duration of MDL proceedings." In addition, 16.1(c)(1)(A) 291 directs attention to whether, if leadership counsel are appointed, "the appointment should be 292 reviewed periodically during the MDL proceedings," again foreseeing recurrent oversight by the 293 court. Though the basic point is to provide the court with the information needed during the initial 294 management conference, that initial conference (and the resulting initial management order under 295 16.1(d)) would ordinarily be a foundation for further judicial management.

296 A Subcommittee member addressed the master question. There has been, and to some extent
297 still is, substantial disagreement about the necessity of following the entire Rule 53 procedure every 298 time there is a need for such an appointment. Some might even say such appointments lead to a 299 "quasi master." The Subcommittee did not seek to resolve these divergent attitudes. The reality is 300 that "you won't get far without party buy-in in MDLs" in situations in which special assignments
301 are needed for a master. But the rule provision is directed more to enabling the parties to inform the 302 court of their views before the 16.1(a) initial management conference. The goal was to leave some 303 play in the joints.

304 Regarding settlement, this member emphasized that "we beat settlement half to death." The 305 lawyer members of the Subcommittee were critical to the process. A starting point is in 306 16.1(c)(1)(C). If the court appoints leadership counsel it is highly likely that those lawyers will play

307 a prominent role in any considerable settlement process. It is appropriate to consider judicial 308 directions regarding this recurrent possibility. Indeed, some say it makes sense on occasion to 309 appoint liaison settlement counsel. That is what Judge Breyer did in the VW Diesel case. Proposed 310 16.1(c)(9) thus refers to existing Rule 16(c)(2)(I). The Note makes a critical point twice -- in MDL
311 proceedings the decision whether to settle is an individual decision by a claimant and defendant. The 312 variety of settlement arrangements is wide. There may be some “global” settlements. One or more 313 defendants may approach some plaintiffs with settlement proposals for them. When bellwether trials 314 are scheduled, that may also prompt attention to settlement of some cases.

315 The judge who raised the questions noted above responded that it is not clear whether the 316 purpose is to make the judge responsible to ensure that the settlement is “fair,” or that the settlement
317 process has “integrity.” In either event, if that is the purpose it is likely it should be in the rule, not 318 just the Note.

319 Another Subcommittee member addressed the settlement topic, stressing that there is a
320 broader perspective here than under Rule 23. On the one hand, if the court appoints leadership 321 counsel, the rule is intended to give the court an opportunity to consider the appropriate role of those 322 attorneys in the settlement context. Separately, whether or not the court appoints leadership counsel, 323 the court in MDL proceedings, as in all cases, has some authority to address resolution. Regarding 324 the Note at lines 425-26, the point is only to attend to procedural fairness, not to assess the fairness 325 of the underlying settlement itself.

326 A judge commented that it may not be sufficient that the rule refers to the possibility of 327 further management conferences; perhaps the title should be limited to the initial conference. On the 328 question of “should” v. “must,” that deserves discussion. It was clear from the introduction of the 329 rule that the Subcommittee carefully considered which verb to use, but “should” seems to be nothing
330 more than advice. Saying “may” makes it clear that the court has authority to do the things
331 mentioned. It is not clear that there is a doubt about the court having authority under the current rules
332 to do the things this rule proposal calls for the court to explore. Saying “must” is surely a rule, and 333 this rule does use that verb for what the parties have to do if the judge tells them to discuss and report 334 on a given topic. But “should” could be seen as existing in a sort of netherworld doing neither of 335 these two things.

336 A Subcommittee member responded that this was a key discussion topic at the transferee
337 judges’ conference. Initially the judges favored “may,” in part to ensure that the rule was clear about 338 the breadth of the court’s authority to address the matters listed in the rule. Another member 339 recognized that one might regard “should” as precatory. But the rule is clear that judges have the 340 authority to address the matters listed, and beyond that it provides guidance on how that authority 341 ordinarily can be used.

342 A judge on the full Committee warned of “mission creep.” This is not really a rule; there is 343 only one “must” in it. This proposal seems almost entirely to be a best practices guidance document.
344 And beyond that, it seems that the idea is that the Note is equally as important as the rule. That seems 345 backward; the Note ought only provide commentary, and is not of equal dignity. Courts have to 346 follow rules; they do not have to follow Notes.

347 Another Committee member agreed. This is really a “best practice” guide. It is not giving 348 new authority or commanding judges to do anything. It is also not clear how this rule operates with 349 current Rule 16. Rule 16(b) commands the judge to adopt a scheduling order limiting the time to do 350 certain things in the case.

351 A Subcommittee member responded that this is not just a best practices guide. Instead, it

352 might best be regarded (as Professor Bradt has written in an article) as providing the judge with the 353 tools to engage in what can be called “information forcing.” And the first sort of information it forces
354 out is guidance for the judge on how to organize and manage the MDL proceedings. This rule does 355 not supplant Rule 16; it operates alongside it. The use of “should” in the rule proposal is intentional 356 and meaningful.

357 A consultant noted that the proper role of the Note raises jurisprudential issues. For one thing,
358 one must be careful about giving advice in a Note, in part because there is a risk of a negative
359 pregnant. In this proposal, we have only one “must,” and even it is contingent. It comes into play 360 under 16.1(c) only if the judge directs the counsel to address certain topics in their report to the court.

361 A judge responded that Rule 16 itself has lots of “may” provisions. And the use of “should”
362 reflects the “overwhelming” feedback the Subcommittee received about the need for flexibility. The 363 starting point has been and should be whether this rule is useful.

364 On that point, the judge stressed that it is exceptionally rare for an MDL not to need at least
365 an initial management conference. But that rare possibility is a reason not to command a useless
366 conference; hence the “should” in 16.1(a) and 16.1(c). The “may” in 16.1(b) recognizes that there
367 might be a question about appointing a “coordinating counsel” to organize for the initial management
368 conference, and this rule puts that to rest. The basic bottom line the Subcommittee has heard, 369 particularly from transferee judges, is that “this is needed.” At least one judge at the recent transferee
370 judges conference said: “This rule would give me authority that I need.” Another example is 371 presented by Judge Chhabria’s 2021 opinion about his common benefit fund order, which may have 372 been done too quickly.

373 Another judge on the Subcommittee emphasized that Judge Chhabria’s experience was an 374 important stimulus to favor adoption of this rule. For a period of time, this judge was adamant that 375 no rule was needed. But Judge Chhabria’s experience played a role in this judge’s conversion.
376 Absent a rule, there is a risk that judges new to the process (and perhaps some with MDL 377 experience) will feel they should promptly sign early orders without an adequate appreciation of the 378 implications of those early decisions. This rule is designed in part to protect the judge, and also to 379 provide a method for non-leadership counsel to be heard on important issues.

380 Another judge emphasized that a high percentage of pending actions are subject to MDL
381 transfer orders. This is not a situation that existed 20 years ago, and the Civil Rules presently say 382 nothing about these very important proceedings. Moreover, the Panel is trying to expand the number
383 of judges given MDL responsibilities, and many transferee judges are seeking to expand the circle
384 of attorneys involved in leadership positions. Guidance is presently important, and likely to become 385 more important.

386 A Committee member questioned these points. For example, the use of “should” in lines 287
387 and 295 regarding convening an initial management conference and directing the parties to meet and 388 confer to address specified topics are not really rules. “It’s not up to us to say this.”

389 A Subcommittee member responded: “We think it is right to say ‘should.’” It’s more than 390 “may.” There almost always is an initial management conference.

391 A judge suggested that an alternative formulation might be “must, unless exceptional 392 circumstances exist,” which at least is in form a rule.

393 This suggestion drew a caution that inviting litigation about whether an exception applies
394 could invite distractions. To contrast, Rule 16(b) says the court “must” enter a scheduling order

395 because, when it was adopted in 1983, judicial management was very new in most federal courts and 396 a command seemed necessary. The use of an “exceptional circumstances” exception can breed
397 litigation. An example is provided by the “exceptional circumstances” exception in Rule 398 26(b)(4)(D)(ii) for discovery of facts or opinions developed by a retained expert not testifying at trial.
399 Inviting disputes about whether such an exception applies could distract the early organization of 400 MDL proceedings.

401 Another Subcommittee member emphasized that “may” is not strong enough. But saying 402 “must” with an exceptional circumstances exception would prove problematical. Using “may” has 403 no teeth. There will be a lot of comments during the public comment period, and this question may 404 deserve further discussion after that is completed.

405 The question whether “should” is used in other rules came up. Although a comprehensive 406 review could not be done on the spot, at least some examples came immediately to the surface:

407 Rule 15(a)(2); “The court should freely give leave [to amend] when justice so requires.”

408 Rule 16(d): “After any conference under this rule, the court should issue an order reciting the 409 action taken.”

410 Rule 25(a)(2): In the event of a party’s death, “[t]he death should be noted in the record.”

411 Rule 56(a): If it grants summary judgment, “[t]he court should state on the record the reasons 412 for granting or denying the motion.”

413 A more comprehensive investigation of other rules might well turn up additional examples.

414 A judge observed that this proposed rule could be put out for comment, but continued to 415 believe that was really just a best practices item. Perhaps “must, if appropriate” could be considered.
416 The invitation to comment might include an invitation to comment on the choice of verbs and 417 whether use of “should” will be useful. Perhaps the published proposal could include bracketed 418 alternative versions.

419 The question was raised whether such bracketed alternatives have ever been offered in the 420 past with regard to possible rule changes. Caution was expressed: such an invitation might provide 421 a muddled result during and after the public comment period. The report to the Standing Committee
422 would call attention to this topic, and ordinarily be included in the published invitation for public
423 comment. So those offering comments could see that this topic deserved attention and comment 424 accordingly. There was one time over recent decades when a footnote called attention to an 425 alternative provision, but offering seemingly co-equal alternatives in a published preliminary draft 426 might produce more confusion than light.

427 A judge on the Subcommittee recalled the series of questions Judge Dow used to ask about 428 possible rule changes: (1) Is there actually a problem?; (2) If so, is there a rule solution to that 429 problem?; and (3) Does the rule-based solution create a risk of harm? This is a unique set of 430 circumstances in MDL proceedings, which are not otherwise addressed in the Civil Rules. So on 431 question (1) there seems to be an actual need. On question (2), the Subcommittee has concluded that 432 there is a rule-based solution -- proposed 16.1. And on question (3), it seems that using “must” or 433 “may” would create problems, and that using “should” is the right choice.

434 A Committee member drew attention to proposed 16.1(c)(4), which seems to assume there
435 should be an exchange of information, perhaps before formal discovery. Shouldn’t that instead say

436 something like “Whether the parties must exchange information . . . .”?

437 A Subcommittee member responded that this is not about formal discovery. FJC research on 438 the “vetting” issue extensively considered earlier in the Subcommittee’s work showed that some 439 such exchange occurs extremely often in large MDL proceedings. Another judge suggested that this 440 is more like existing Rule 26(a)(1)(A) initial disclosure. Attention was drawn to lines 458-62 of the 441 draft Note, which provide an explanation of the focus of 16.1(c)(4).

442 [During the lunch break, the Subcommittee met and considered whether or how to modify
443 the proposed preliminary draft to respond to concerns voiced by Committee members.]

444 After the lunch break, the MDL Subcommittee presented revisions to its proposed 445 preliminary draft that responded to certain concerns raised during the morning’s discussion. By way 446 of introduction, it was noted that some ideas for changing the proposed rule were not adopted. The 447 title was not changed. 16.1(c)(4) was not changed. 16.1(c)(9) was not changed. Finally, the word 448 “should” was retained.

449 But the Subcommittee proposed making the following revisions, which were displayed to the 450 whole Committee for its review:

451 Rule 16.1(b) would be revised as follows:

452 (b) DESIGNATION OF COORDINATING COUNSEL FOR INITIAL MDL
453 MANAGEMENT CONFERENCE. The transferee court may designate coordinating 454 counsel to assist the court with the initial MDL management ~~MDL~~ conference under 455 Rule 16.1(a) and to work with plaintiffs or defendants to prepare for any conference
456 and to prepare any report ordered pursuant to Rule 16.1(c).

457 Rule 16.1(c) would be revised as follows:

458 (c) PREPARATION OF REPORT FOR INITIAL MDL MANAGEMENT
459 CONFERENCE. The transferee court should order the parties to meet and confer to 460 prepare and submit a report to the court prior to the initial MDL management 461 conference. The report must address any matter designated by the court, which may 462 include any matter listed below addressed in Rule 16.1(c)(1)-(12) or in Rule 16. The 463 report may also address any other matter the parties desire to bring to the court’s 464 attention.

465 The Committee Note at lines 362-65 would be revised as follows:

466 Rule 16.1(b). Rule 16.1(b) recognizes the court may designate coordinating counsel 467 -- perhaps more often on the plaintiff than the defendant side -- to ensure effective and 468 coordinated discussion during the Rule 16.1(c) meet and confer ~~conference~~ and to provide 469 an informative report for the court to use during the initial MDL management conference
470 under Rule 16.1(a).

471 The Committee Note at lines 418-26 would be revised as follows:

472 Subparagraph (C) recognizes that, in addition to managing pretrial proceedings, 473 another important role for leadership counsel in some MDL proceedings is to facilitate 474 possible settlement. Even in large MDL proceedings, the question whether the parties choose 475 to settle a claim is just that -- a decision to be made by those particular parties. Nevertheless,

476 leadership counsel ordinarily play a key role in communicating with opposing counsel and 477 the court about settlement and facilitating discussions about resolution. It is often important 478 that the court be regularly apprised of developments regarding potential settlement of some 479 or all actions in the MDL proceeding. In its supervision of leadership counsel, the court
480 should make every effort to ensure that leadership counsel's participation in any settlement 481 process is appropriate fair.

482 The Committee Note at lines 458-62 would be revised as follows:

483 Rule 16.1(c)(4). Experience has shown that in ~~certain~~ MDL proceedings early 484 exchange of information about the factual bases for claims and defenses can facilitate ~~the~~ 485 efficient management ~~of the MDL proceedings~~. Some courts have utilized “fact sheets” or 486 a “census” as methods to take a survey of the claims and defenses presented, largely as a 487 management method for planning and organizing the proceedings.

488 The Committee Note at lines 482-84 would be revised as follows:

489 Rule 16.1(c)(6). A major task for the MDL transferee judge is to supervise discovery 490 in an efficient manner. The principal issues in the MDL proceedings may help guide the 491 discovery plan and avoid inefficiencies and unnecessary duplication, ~~addressed in Rule~~
492 ~~16.1(c)(11)~~.

493 The Committee Note at lines 494-505 would be revised as follows:

494 Rule 16.1(c)(9). Even if the court has not appointed leadership counsel, it may be that 495 judicial assistance could facilitate the settlement of some or all actions before the transferee 496 judge. Ultimately, the question whether parties reach a settlement is just that -- a decision to 497 be made by the parties. But as recognized in Rule 16(a)(5) and 16(c)(2)(I), the court may 498 assist the parties in settlement efforts. In MDL proceedings, in addition to mediation and 499 other dispute resolution alternatives, the court's use of a magistrate judge or a master, 500 focused discovery orders, timely adjudication of principal legal issues, selection of 501 representative bellwether trials, and coordination with state courts may facilitate settlement.
502 ~~Should the court be called upon to approve a settlement, as in any class actions filed within~~ 503 ~~the MDL, or when the court is asked to appoint a settlement administrator, the court should~~ 504 ~~ensure that all parties have reasonable notice of the process that will be used to determine the~~ 505 ~~division of the proceeds, that the process of allocation has integrity, and that monies be held~~
506 ~~safely and distributed appropriately.~~

507 After these changes were presented and explained to the Advisory Committee, it voted 508 without dissent to recommend publication of the revised Rule 16.1 proposal for public comment.

509 Rule 41 Subcommittee

510 Judge Bissoon introduced the report of the Rule 41 Subcommittee. It had held three online
511 meetings, but had not reached consensus or closure. Accordingly, one could say that it is still at a 512 preliminary point. To take Judge Dow's approach to rule-change ideas, the first question -- whether 513 there is a problem -- may depend on where you are or what kind of case you are talking about. On 514 the “where you are” consideration, the divergence of the circuits on the rule means that judges in 515 some circuits have less latitude than judges in other circuits. On the “kind of cases” consideration, 516 one might focus on civil rights and pro se cases and conclude that there is indeed a problem.

517 Professor Bradt continued the introduction, noting that the core question is that we have a

518 rule that seems straightforward and has remained essentially the same since originally adopted in 519 1938. One could, therefore, say that it only applies when the entire action is dismissed. But that is 520 the minority view, suggesting the courts chafe at such a limited handling of the problem. Often the 521 rule is found satisfied when a plaintiff dismisses as to one of two defendants. District courts may be 522 more flexible yet. In the background lie possibly “unintended consequences,” particularly relating 523 to possible preclusion effects -- dismissal without prejudice may not affect preclusion if the 524 remainder of the case is fully adjudicated on the merits.

525 A comment observed that the cases are presently inconsistent, but also that it is not clear what 526 the result of a rule change would be. Instead, the outcome is not simple. To some extent, that is 527 illustrated by a recent 11th Circuit case in which all the parties and the district court thought that 528 when the plaintiff used Rule 41(a) to dismiss the remainder of its claims after the district court had 529 dismissed some but not all of the claims, that would produce a final judgment subject to immediate 530 review on appeal. But the court of appeals concluded that some claims in the very long complaint 531 had not been effectively dismissed, with the result that it could not address the appeal on the merits.

532 Another comment noted that there might be said to be a slippery slope problem to begin
533 sorting out all the inter-related rule provisions that could be affected. It might be likened to pulling 534 one loose thread on a sweater, only to find that the unraveling goes much further than initially 535 appreciated. And it is worth noting that it always seems open to the plaintiff to seek dismissal via 536 court order under Rule 41(a)(2), which has a default setting of without prejudice. So the Rule
537 41(a)(1) problem only exists when the defendant (or a defendant) will not stipulate to dismissal
538 without prejudice. That resistance to stipulating might result from uneasiness that the dismissed 539 claim will come back in another forum, but it may well be that such a “boomerang” claim is quite 540 rare. Nonetheless, a party unwilling to stipulate -- even before an answer is filed -- could make 541 41(a)(1) dismissal of less than the entire action unavailable.

542 A Committee member pointed out the preclusion complications that could result if the court
543 dismissed without prejudice but the remaining claims reached judgment on the merits. Assuming the 544 dismissed claim would be viewed as arising from the same transaction, that might well preclude the 545 assertion of the dismissed claim in another action.

546 Another Committee member noted that this can be a pretty important set of issues, 547 particularly for some unsophisticated litigants. “This is something that affects some people in 548 important ways.”

549 A Subcommittee member reiterated the view that Rule 41(a) is not designed to “shape and 550 prune” multi-party or multi-claim actions. Other rules, most notably Rule 15 on amendments without 551 leave of court, address these issues. At the same time, the 11th Circuit decision was wrong.

552 Another comment noted that there may be considerable reason for caution due to the 553 Supreme Court’s view in the Semtek case that preclusion is not within the Enabling Act authority.
554 In addition, with regard to self-represented litigants, it might be useful to canvas pro se law clerks
555 to see what their experience has been. A further suggestion was that the Administrative Office has 556 a pro se working group that could be a resource.

557 Against that background, the Subcommittee’s work will continue.

558 Discovery Subcommittee

559 In addition to its action item on privilege log issues, the Discovery Subcommittee reported 560 on three other items on which it is currently focusing. Chief Judge David Godbey, Chair of the 561 Subcommittee, made the report.

562           “Delivery” of a subpoena; Rule 45(b)(1) says a subpoena should be served by “delivering 563 a copy to the named person.” There are divergent judicial decisions, even in the same district, on 564 whether that requires delivery by hand or can be accomplished by other means. More than a decade
565 ago, a Rule 45 Subcommittee comprehensively surveyed issues involving the rule and made fairly 566 comprehensive changes to many features of the rule. One of the issues raised then was the question 567 of clarifying what “delivering” means in the rule. But that was put aside, in part because it seemed 568 important -- at least for some nonparty witnesses called upon to respond on short notice -- that in 569 hand service occur.

570           A Committee member expressed concern about the possibility that some substituted method
571 of service might be sanctioned under the rule, particularly when the subpoena called for very prompt 572 action by the witness, often a nonparty. In hand service can be important in such situations.

573           A liaison member of the Committee suggested that overnight courier or email should suffice 574 in most instances.

575           One suggestion going forward would be for research to be done, perhaps by the Rules Law
576 Clerk, on whether state court systems have more flexible provisions for serving subpoenas. A first 577 look at the California provisions suggested that they are nearly the same as in Rule 45.

578           Filing under seal: Several years ago, Prof. Volokh and the Reporters’ Committee for 579 Freedom of the Press urged a fairly elaborate new Rule 5.3. One feature of this proposal was that it
580 recognize what the submission said was already recognized in the case law -- that the showing 581 needed to support filing under seal is much more exacting than the standard to support a protective 582 order under Rule 26(c). The Subcommittee developed a sketch of changes to Rule 26(c) and existing 583 Rule 5 to make that clear in the rules.

584           But the submission went well beyond the standard to be used for filing under seal and 585 proposed a variety of special procedures to attend motions to seal, seemingly including posting 586 outside the case file for the given case and forbidding any decision sooner than seven days after such 587 posting. Meanwhile, an inquiry to the Federal Magistrate Judges Association gave an indication the 588 magistrate judges (who often handle such motions) did not think there was a problem with the 589 standard for filing under seal, but did think that the diversity of procedures used for deciding motions 590 to seal might be regularized.

591           Around this time, however, the Subcommittee also learned that the Administrative Office
592 had formed a working group to study problems of filing under seal more generally, and the advice
593 to the Subcommittee was to defer acting on the pending proposal until that A.O. project produced 594 results. So, as reported to the full Committee, the Subcommittee put the project on the back burner.

595           Early this year, however, the Subcommittee was informed that it seemed unlikely the A.O.
596 project would address standards for filing under seal. But the A.O. group seems focused on what 597 might be called “inside the clerk’s office” features of handling materials filed under seal, and it
598 remains uncertain how that work will bear on the multiple other proposals made in the original 599 submission or the FMJA idea that regularizing procedures would be desirable. So work will continue 600 on these topics.

601           Rule 28 proposal: In March, Judge Baylson (E.D. Pa.), a former member of the Advisory 602 Committee, proposed an amendment to Rule 28 to address discovery activity in relation to U.S.
603 litigation occurring outside this country. Because this submission was received so recently, the

Draft Minutes
Civil Rules Advisory Committee

604 Subcommittee has not had time to examine it in any detail. It may be that Professor Gensler (another 605 former member of the Advisory Committee mentioned in Judge Baylson’s submission) can offer the 606 Subcommittee background on the issues. Work will begin on this proposal in the future.

607 Rule 7.1

608 Professor Bradt introduced the issues presented. Two submissions have addressed conflict
609 disclosure. Judge Erickson called attention to what might be called the “grandparent” problem, with 610 the illustration being Berkshire Hathaway, which owns 100% of the stock of a number of 611 corporations that in turn own 100% of the stock of other corporations. So if a judge owns Berkshire
612 Hathaway stock and one of those “grandchild” corporations is a party to a case pending before the 613 judge, the judge may not know of the problem even though under 28 U.S.C. § 455(b)(4) the judge
614 should recuse. And Berkshire Hathaway is not the only corporation that might have such holdings;
615 another example identified by Judge Erickson is CitiGroup.

616 Possibly pertinent to this kind of situation going forward might be the Anti-Corruption and 617 Public Integrity Act of 2022 (S. 5315), introduced by Senator Warren. That bill would require judges 618 to “maintain and submit to the Judicial Conference a list of each association or interest that would 619 require the justice, judge, or magistrate to recuse under subsection (b)(4).” How exactly judges
620 would identify all such interests in the case of very large conglomerates like Berkshire Hathaway is 621 uncertain.

622 Meanwhile, the Courthouse Ethics and Transparency Act (Pub. L. 117-125, May 13, 2022), 623 now requires the creation of a searchable internet database to enable public access to any report
624 required to be filed with regard to securities or similar holdings. That database came online on Nov.
625 9, 2022.

626 Judge Erickson submits that an amendment to Rule 7.1 could facilitate determinations
627 whether a judge has to recuse. Presently, Rule 7.1(a)(1) directs that a nongovernmental corporate 628 party must disclose “any parent corporation and any publicly held corporation owning 10% or more 629 of its stock.”

630 Magistrate Judge Barksdale proposes that Rule 7.1 be amended to require every party to 631 certify that they have checked the assigned judge’s database disclosures. Then, if there is a possible
632 conflict, the party must file a motion to recuse or a notice of possible conflict within 14 days.

633 It seems clear that this is a difficult and delicate situation for judges. Congress may take 634 further action that is pertinent, as mentioned above, but it is not presently possible to determine 635 whether that will happen. Expanding the disclosure requirement beyond “parent corporations” could 636 make definition of what additional corporations must be disclosed quite difficult. And it may be that 637 other entities present similar difficulties. Recently, for example, Rule 7.1 was amended to call for 638 disclosure of information about all members of LLCs, including all members of any LLC that is a 639 member of an LLC that is a party before the court. That change was designed to reveal whether 640 compete diversity exists, not to address recusal problems. But the stimulus was the proliferation of 641 LLCs, and the intricacy of their organization. It seems that there is a very wide range of entities that 642 engage in business nowadays.

643 Other rules committees have similar issues before them. But for the present it seems sensible 644 that the Civil Rules Advisory Committee take the lead in addressing these challenges.

645 A judge mentioned getting a disclosure statement raising such a difficulty. Without that 646 disclosure, the judge could not have found out about the problem.

647 One suggestion was to look at local rules to see if they add such disclosure requirements. The 648 D.C. Circuit, for example, has its local rule 26.1, which could be a model. Another possibility might 649 be to investigate how the states approach these issues with regard to judges on their state courts. It 650 seems reasonable to suppose that somewhat similar issues bear on recusal of state court judges, even 651 though they obviously are not bound by the federal statute.

652 A Wall Street Journal article identified a significant number of instances in which federal 653 judges decided cases involving parties in which they held interests. It seems that all, or almost all,
654 of these examples were cases in which the judge did not know of the disqualification problem. A
655 Committee member noted that these are important issues, and that passing them by is not the best 656 way to go.

657 But another Committee member noted the thorny problem of identifying such conflicts.
658 Ownership of business entities is changing “by the minute.” The range of forms used to do business
659 seems to grow by leaps and bounds. Finding a solution will be a major challenge.

660 Another point was brought up: There is a bill in Congress seeking to require the Federal 661 Judicial Center to use its research capacity to unearth this sort of information. This sort of research
662 effort might absorb a very large portion of the FJC’s capacity, and could also create tensions between 663 the Center and the judiciary. That would be very unfortunate.

664 Returning to the local rules possibility, it was noted that all or almost all of the clerks in 665 district courts require some disclosures. There are local rules that have forms for disclosure; those 666 could be investigated.

667 But a serious problem was noted: What are the updating requirements? Judges’ holdings may 668 change over time. And it seems clear that corporate and other business arrangements change over 669 time. Not only do companies “go public,” some that were public “go private.”

670 A judge emphasized that it’s essential that we operate within the bounds of what can be done.
671 Could one have a rule that required disclosure of “all affiliated entities”? That would seem to raise 672 questions about what “entity” is and what “affiliated” means.

673 Returning to local rules, it was noted that it is likely some go well beyond the corporate form 674 -- LLCs, partnerships, limited partnerships, joint ventures, etc. And getting into the amount of 675 stockholding could be complicated. Suppose a corporation that owns 50% of the stock of a 676 corporation that owns 10% of a publicly held entity. Is that counted as a 5% holding for these 677 purposes?

678 Another Committee member cautioned that it may not be so difficult. It is likely unwise to 679 try to include “affiliates” in this effort. And moving beyond “parents” -- perhaps to “siblings” and 680 “cousins,” etc. -- would likely cause unnecessary problems.

681 A judge questioned whether the problem is really so great. At some point, it may seem that 682 the rules cannot be a cure-all. One might say the central issue is the application of the recusal statute, 683 which itself may be the subject of further change. Given the possibly exceptional difficulty of the 684 task, one might conclude that at some point such directives must be honored but in the breach.

685 Another judge reacted that if the Berkshire Hathaway example is the correct guideline, judges
686 need to know. This judge also mentioned the recurrent issue raised with third party litigation funding
687 that judges might unknowingly hold interests in funders supporting one of the parties in a case before
688 the judge. In the past, it has seemed unlikely that judges would be holding interests in hedge funds

689 allegedly involved in litigation funding, but some reports indicate that funding is going mainstream.

690 A more specific reaction was offered: The proposal that the rule require certification by 691 parties that they checked the judge's holdings on the new database does not look promising. For one 692 thing, it is not clear that the database is designed for that purpose. More significantly, it seems 693 unreasonable to expect pro se litigants (the subject of another agenda item) to be able to make a 694 reliable check. And if the proposed requirement that parties file a motion to recuse or a notice of 695 potential conflict within a specified time is meant to foreclose later recusal, that seems to go against 696 the statute, which simply requires recusal.

697 In conclusion, the Committee would continue to gather information and study this set of 698 issues. It is likely that a subcommittee would be formed to develop information and consider 699 solutions. It is not clear whether such a subcommittee should include members of other advisory 700 committees. The work will continue.

701 Rule 38

702 In 2016, a question was raised before the Standing Committee about whether to consider an 703 amendment to Rule 81(c)(3) to protect against waiver of jury trial in removed cases. [That 704 submission -- 15-CV-A -- remains on the Advisory Committee's agenda.]

705 After that Standing Committee discussion of that question, two members of the Standing 706 Committee -- then-Judge Gorsuch and Judge Graber -- proposed that Rule 38 be amended to "flip 707 the default," as is true of the Criminal Rules, which direct that trial will be to a jury unless the 708 government, the defendant and the judge all agree that it will be to the court.

709 Interestingly, it seems that the Criminal Rules Committee is considering whether to change
710 the Criminal Rule on jury trial to provide that if the defendant requests a court trial and the judge
711 thinks the request is meritorious the government not be permitted to veto that election. Whether that 712 Criminal Rules amendment idea is pursued remains uncertain. In a sense, however, such a change
713 would make jury less protected (with the judge's oversight) than under current Rule 38, which 714 permits either party to make a binding request for a jury trial. In addition, under Rule 39(b), the court
715 may order a jury trial even though a Rule 38 jury demand was not made.

716 During the Committee's October 2022 meeting the agenda book included an FJC study of 717 jury demands that found little indication that failure to adhere to Rule 38's requirements had 718 prevented parties who wanted jury trials from getting jury trials. So one possibility at that time would 719 be to remove this matter from the agenda on the ground that it did not satisfy Judge Dow's first 720 inquiry -- there seems not to be a problem. That decision was deferred, however, because the FJC
721 was working on a massive project ordered by Congress about differences among districts in the 722 frequency or number of jury trials. That project was not yet finished, and might shed light on the 723 Rule 38 proposal.

724 The report to Congress has been completed and was included in the agenda book. It does not 725 focus on jury demands in particular, but rather was addressed to the declining frequency of civil jury
726 trials. Discussion as the work was being done frequently prompted judges to say that if a party failed 727 to satisfy Rule 38 "we forgive." But some judges said the rule requires a waiver and we follow the 728 rule.

729 In terms of what seems to have been the reason why Congress directed that the study be 730 prepared, it does not shed much light on why different districts have different numbers of jury trials.
731 From one perspective it does -- the largest district (C.D.Cal.) has the largest number of jury trials.

732 But if one focuses on frequency of jury trials as a percentage of civil cases, the smallest district --
733 Wyoming -- has the highest percentage. That percentage is only 2.7%, however, so inter-district
734 comparisons don't tell us much because the figure is very low all around. Sixty years ago, 735 nationwide, it was about ten times as high.

736 It was suggested, however, that the Gorsuch/Graber proposal might be taken to raise a 737 normative issue more than a question to be answered by empirical work. If the right to jury trial is 738 important, it should not be difficult to enforce. How one assesses Judge Dow's first question -- is 739 there a need -- in normative terms is not entirely certain.

740 In conclusion, it was decided that this proposal could be removed from the Committee's 741 agenda. The pending Rule 81(c) issue will remain, however.

742 Pro se E-Filing

743 Professor Struve (Reporter of the Standing Committee) gave an update on the work of the 744 inter-committee working group on whether to facilitate electronic filing by pro se litigants. The 745 Committee has received several submissions urging the easing of the current rules, which leave the 746 choice whether to permit pro se E-Filing largely up to individual district courts. The pandemic 747 fortified momentum behind this initiative.

748 With great help from the Federal Judicial Center (particularly Tim Reagan), interviews have 749 been done with 15 court personnel from 8 districts. A particular focus has been on the districts that 750 exempt non-electronic filers from having also to mail hard copies of each filing to each other party
751 even though the clerk's office will upload the documents and the parties will then get the document
752 via CM/ECF. In all the districts that have made such accommodations, the report is that it works 753 fine.

754 Special issues arise when a document is filed under seal. One solution then is to restrict 755 online access to parties. But that is not an issue at the core of the basic concern.

756 The biggest pending question is to figure out how pro se litigants know which parties will 757 receive service via CM/ECF and that paper service by mail is therefore not necessary.

758 Special problems can exist if pro se litigants are in prison.

759 A sketch of a possible amendment to Rule 5 appears on pp. 256-57 of the agenda book.

760 One concern that was raised seems not problematical -- the risk that pro se litigants who got 761 credentials to use CM/ECF would then share those credentials with others. There is one instance in 762 which a son used his mother's credentials to make filings on her behalf in a case to which she was 763 a party, but this does not seem like a serious problem.

764 Another possibility is an alternative to CM/ECF -- some districts allow electronic noticing 765 without formal credentials.

766 The conclusion was that the work will continue, and that more information is needed.

767 Rule 23

768 Purely as information items, this topic is on the agenda to alert Committee members to 769 ongoing matters. No current action is before the Committee.

770 First, during the October 2022 meeting the 11th Circuit decision by a divided panel that two 771 19th century Supreme Court decisions preclude “incentive awards” to class representatives in class
772 actions was raised as a concern. The 11th Circuit declined to grant a rehearing en banc, and a cert.
773 petition is now pending before the Supreme Court. Meanwhile, at least some courts are explicitly 774 not following the 11th Circuit’s ruling; the agenda book contained a reference to a recent 1st Circuit
775 case declining to follow that view. But it appears that a panel of the Second Circuit has taken a 776 different view; this ruling may be the subject of a petition for rehearing en banc.

777 A Committee member observed that it is unrealistic to expect class representatives to invest 778 substantial time and energy (and perhaps even money) into doing a good job in that role but deny 779 them any compensation for that effort. Even class member objectors can receive awards if their 780 objections result in improvements to the deal. In class action settlement situations, we want the class
781 reps to take an active interest; why shouldn’t they get equal treatment? As for the Second Circuit 782 case, that may be an example of over-compensation; the class reps were awarded something like 783 $900,000. Perhaps a rule could be devised to guide district courts in making such awards, but a total 784 ban based on a 19th century precedent does not make sense.

785 Another member agreed. The 9th Circuit has articulated some factors for determining what 786 amount to award, and there is guidance of that sort in other circuits though not all of them. If this 787 issue goes forward, that would be a place to look; it is possible that case law suffices on this point.
788 The first question, however, is whether the Supreme Court addresses the question on the merits; on 789 that, it is necessary to watch and wait.

790 The other issue is a proposal by Lawyers for Civil Justice to amend Rule 23(b)(3) so that it
791 does not limit the superiority prong to adjudicative alternatives. An example is a 7th Circuit case in 792 which a product recall prompted more than 50% of purchasers of the product in question to obtain 793 the refund offered but a lawyer nevertheless filed a class action seeking more on behalf of the other 794 purchasers. The district court denied certification on the ground the recall program gave the class
795 adequate relief, but the 7th Circuit held that this was not a consideration permitted under the current 796 rule.

797 The agenda book report raises some concerns that might arise if this proposal moves forward 798 -- whether companies would be less likely to make such recall offers if class actions could be 799 defeated by after-the-fact offers, whether courts could, early in the litigation, make the sort of 800 comparison that would need to be made if presented with a settlement embodying similar measures
801 for the non-participating customers. LCJ recently submitted a further paper on the topic of this 802 proposal (23-CV-J), which came in too late to be included in the agenda book.

803 A judge noted that Rule 23 is a perennial. For example, the question of ascertainability has 804 remained uncertain for many years. For the present, on both these issues, it is better to let things 805 percolate.

806 The matters will be carried on the Committee’s agenda.

807 In forma pauperis applications

808 Professors Hammond and Clopton submitted a proposal that the Committee consider 809 rulemaking regarding the handling of ifp status under 28 U.S.C. § 1915. Professor Hammond’s Yale
810 Law Journal article in 2019 showed that there were significant differences in the way such 811 applications were handled -- both in terms of the criteria for receiving a fee waiver and the 812 procedures for requesting a fee waiver -- in districts across the country. Indeed, it seems there are 813 difference between judges in a given court. One concern is reported inconsistency in selecting the 814 A.O. form that should be used.

815 The topic was introduced as principally involving a statute. The Civil Rules do not include 816 specific provisions about ifp applications, and -- at least as to the standards that should be used to 817 decide such applications -- a national rule seems a dubious instrument. For example, it is likely that 818 one could conclude that somebody in San Francisco (where the cost of living is very high) would be 819 a pauper with income or assets that would be more than sufficient in some other parts of the country.
820 And such things change much more rapidly than the Enabling Act process would permit changes to 821 be made.

822 In addition, it may be that various districts diverge considerably in their personnel for making
823 such determinations. Large metropolitan districts may have a considerable platoon of pro se law 824 clerks who can do an initial review, while other districts may not have a similar setup.

825 But this is an important issue, and the A.O. has a pro se working group. It seems that an effort 826 to make contact with that group should be made. It may well be that this topic is not suited to 827 rulemaking, but the topic should remain on the agenda. For the present, the topic will be retained on 828 the agenda pending Judge Rosenberg's discussion with the A.O. Pro Se Working Group.

829 Rule 53

830 In July 2022 Senators Tillis and Leahy wrote the Chief Justice relaying press reports that a
831 single federal judge was overusing "technical advisors" to assist in addressing patent infringement
832 cases. According to the article cited by the senators, using that assistance the judge is able to preside 833 over as many as six or seven Markman hearings in a week. According to the story, at the time the 834 story was written this judge had "about 25% of the nation's patent cases."

835 The senators observe that this judge's practices "appear to clearly exceed the boundaries of 836 Rule 53," and that "[t]he rules governing the use of special masters seem clear to us." They asked 837 for an investigation into whether the practices described in this article are authorized under Rule 53, 838 and if so whether the rule should be amended.

839 The senators sent a copy of their letter to the Chief Judge of this district court, who may have 840 taken action to change circumstances there by introducing district-wide assignment of patent cases 841 on a random basis.

842 On the rulemaking front, as the senators note, the Rule seems appropriately designed and 843 focused. It was comprehensively rewritten about 15 years ago to take account of recent 844 developments. Further change to rule seems unnecessary. In terms of rule amendment, then, the 845 appropriate measure seems to be to remove the topic from the Committee's agenda.

846 But it is also important to make certain the senators know of the response their inquiry
847 produced -- that the rule seems correct, as they note, and therefore that this situation does not call 848 for a rule amendment. The Rules Committee Staff will ensure that the Administrative Office has 849 responded to the senators' letter.

850 Rule 11

851 Andrew Straw urges that Rule 11 be amended. The stimulus seems to be a longstanding 852 conflict between him and his former employer -- the Indiana Supreme Court. This conflict has 853 included suits he filed in federal court against various entities. In some of those suits, Rule 11
854 sanctions were not imposed, but state bar authorities suspended him from practice partly as a result.

855 Mr. Straw proposes that the rule be amended to forbid state bar authorities from taking such action 856 unless a federal court has first imposed formal Rule 11 sanctions.

857 The interaction of Rule 11 sanctions and state bar discipline is occasionally an important
858 matter. A number of state bars direct attorneys to notify the bar if they are subjected to sanctions by 859 a court, including a federal court acting under Rule 11. The state bars may treat that circumstance 860 as a basis for imposing bar discipline on the attorney. It seems this is what happened to Mr. Straw.
861 (He also submitted a comment regarding the amendment to Rule 12(a) that the Committee approved
862 for formal adoption, raising objections to the handling of some of his litigation with the Supreme 863 Court of Indiana.)

864 The federal courts do not control state bar discipline. Yet Mr. Straw proposes adding a new 865 Rule 11(e) entitled “Containment of Discipline and Prevention of State Court Abuse.” Although the 866 district courts can, and sometimes do, impose discipline including something akin to disbarment for 867 conduct in federal court, they do not have authority under that rule to constrain state bar authorities.
868 Attempting by rule to prevent state bar authorities from acting pursuant to their governing statutes
869 would likely raise serious questions about rulemaking power.

870 The matter will be dropped from the agenda.

871 Mandatory Initial Discovery Project

872 Initial disclosure was a highly controversial addition to Rule 26 in 1993. Owing the 873 controversy surrounding this addition to Rule 26, it was initially made optional; districts could opt
874 out. There ensued a patchwork of regimes in different districts. The initial disclosure was extended 875 nationwide in 2000, again prompting considerable controversy even though it removed the 876 “heartburn” of having to disclose harmful evidence.

877 Nonetheless, stronger disclosure rules might make litigation less costly and produce faster
878 resolutions. To evaluate such a possibility, a pilot project was approved by the Standing Committee
879 and many judges in the District of Arizona and the Northern District of Illinois agreed to implement 880 the pilot project. In brief, it restored the “heartburn” requirement.

881 A very intensive study of the results of this pilot in approximately 5,000 cases in Arizona
882 (where the state courts have long had a similar disclosure requirement) and 12,000 cases in the N.D.
883 Ill. revealed that cases handled were resolved more rapidly. That difference between these cases and 884 cases not handled under the pilot was statistically significant. This was not a huge difference, but it 885 was good news. In Dr. Lee’s words, this was a “modest but real effect on duration.” But it may be 886 that some resolved quickly because otherwise the parties would have had to comply with the pilot’s 887 requirements.

888 The study also involved attorney surveys on closed cases, and the report (100 pages long)
889 provides much detail about attorney responses. The responses did not show great enthusiasm among 890 attorneys for the pilot. Interestingly, though the expectation was that younger attorneys would be 891 more receptive, in actuality more experienced attorneys were satisfied more often.

892 One way of looking at the study’s results is whether they support a “clarion call” for 893 amending Rule 26(a) along these lines. It is difficult to find such a call in the data, despite the 894 heartening finding about duration. It may be that the attitudes that contributed to the controversy in 895 1991-93 about adding initial disclosure to the rules, and again in 1998-2000 about removing the “opt 896 out” for districts and imposing it nationwide persist today.

1 6. Discovery Subcommittee

2 Discovery Subcommittee Report

3 On Aug. 29, 2023, the Discovery Subcommittee held a meeting via Teams. Notes of this 4 meeting are in this agenda book. The Subcommittee discussed four topics, presented below. On 5 two of them, it concluded that work should proceed. On the third, it concluded that no suitable 6 amendment project presently appears warranted in light of the FJC report on the Mandatory Initial 7 Discovery Project. On the fourth topic – rules to deal with discovery outside the U.S. – it concluded
8 that the topic is important but also that the Advisory Committee (and the Subcommittee) would 9 need to do substantial work to achieve needed familiarity with the issues involved, and that 10 presently there does not appear it has the capacity to commence this work in light of other ongoing 11 obligations. So the topic should remain on the agenda, and members of the full Committee are 12 invited to express views on the issues presented.

13 (1) Rule 45(b)(1) – Manner of Service of Subpoena

14 This topic was brought to the Advisory Committee’s attention by Judge Catherine 15 McEwen, liaison to the Bankruptcy Rules Advisory Committee. Similar concerns have been 16 presented several times over the last 20 years, but the issue was not taken up in the Rule 45 project 17 about a decade ago.

18 Rule 45(b)(1) now specifies that “[s]erving a subpoena requires delivering a copy to the 19 named person and, if the subpoena requires that person’s attendance, tendering the fees for 1 day’s
20 attendance and the mileage allowed by law.” As the submissions we have received on this topic 21 illustrate, there seem to be notable differences in whether this direction is satisfied even though in-22 hand service is not accomplished. Background issues include whether service requirements might 23 be different for nonparty witnesses than for party witnesses, and whether subpoenas to appear and 24 testify in court should be treated as different from subpoenas to produce documents or to appear
25 and testify at a deposition. Trying to break up Rule 45 to provide separately for these somewhat 26 different situations could produce considerable complications, however.

27 At the Subcommittee’s request, Rules Law Clerk Chris Pryby prepared a comprehensive 28 memo dated June 1, 2023, on the requirements of the state courts, which might provide insights.
29 That memo is in this agenda book. It is very thorough. But it does not show that there is any 30 consistent thread of service requirements in state courts that could provide useful guidance for 31 Rule 45. Indeed, quite a few of these state courts have subpoena rules modeled on our rule, but it 32 seems that there is nevertheless some divergence in practice among those state courts.

33 The Subcommittee’s Aug. 29 discussion led to the conclusion that the rule’s ambiguity
34 about service of subpoenas has produced sufficient wasteful litigation activity to warrant an effort
35 to clarify the rule. At the same time, the consensus was also that requiring in-hand service in every 36 instance (as some courts have concluded is required under the current rule) would not be a good 37 idea.

38 Instead, after discussion the Subcommittee gravitated toward recognizing several means of 39 service of initial process authorized under Rule 4 and also recognizing that the court (or perhaps,

40 a local rule) could authorize additional means of service. For purposes of discussion with the full 41 Committee, it therefore offers the following sketch of a possible amendment to Rule 45(b)(1):

42 (1) *By Whom and How; Tendering Fees. Any person who is at least 18 years
43 old and not a party may serve a subpoena. Serving a subpoena requires 44 delivering a copy to the named person, including using any means of service
45 authorized under Rule 4(d), 4(e), 4(f), 4(h), or 4(i), or authorized by court 46 order [in the action] [or by local rule] {if reasonably calculated to give 47 notice} and, if the subpoena requires that person’s attendance, tendering the 48 fees for 1 day’s attendance and the mileage allowed by law.

49 This sketch includes choices among means authorized under Rule 4. Some of those selected
50 might be dropped, or others might be added. At least one – waiver of service under Rule 4(d) –
51 likely has timing aspects that would make it inappropriate for service of some subpoenas. It is 52 worth noting, however, that the Committee has received a submission urging that the waiver of 53 service provision in Rule 4(d)(1)(G) be amended explicitly to authorize service of the waiver 54 request by email. See 21-CV-Y, from Joshua Goldblum. (Presently the rule requires service “by 55 first-class mail or other reliable means.”)

56 Another point worth noting is that Rule 4(e)(1) permits reliance on state law provisions for 57 service of summons, which might begin to incorporate the various state-law provisions presented
58 in the Rules Law Clerk memo in this agenda book. The local rule possibility might take account
59 of the wide variety of methods permitted under state law in various states. It could be that a district 60 court would wish to adopt some of those local methods by local rule on the theory that they are 61 familiar to lawyers in the state.

62 The court order authorization may be unnecessary. But Rule 4(f)(3) does explicitly 63 authorize a court order for service by other means when the person is to be served in a foreign 64 country. There is no clear parallel service provision for a court authorizing alternative means of 65 service under Rule 4 on a person to be served in this country, so perhaps explicit authority in Rule 66 45 for such a court order would be desirable.

67 A subpoena may be directed to a nonparty and may require very immediate action. For 68 example, it might command a nonparty to testify at a trial or hearing in court on very short notice.
69 Certainly default is a serious consequence that can follow service of initial process if no responsive
70 pleading is filed. But the time to respond may be considerably longer than with some subpoenas.
71 Under Rule 55, moreover, courts are generally fairly liberal in setting aside defaults, particularly 72 if there is some question about the effectiveness of service and the request to set aside the default 73 is made promptly after the defendant becomes aware of the entry of default.

74 The invocation of the due process standard “reasonably calculated to give notice” might be 75 unnecessary, for district courts would presumably have that in mind when asked to authorize 76 additional means of service in a given case, and district courts adopting local rules would similarly 77 be expected to have that in mind. If it were adopted, however, the Committee Note should specify 78 that actual notice is not required, but only the use of substitute means reasonably calculated to give 79 notice.

80 Another thing that might be considered would be building in some sort of minimum time
81 requirement. Regarding depositions, Rule 30(b)(1) says the noticing party “must give reasonable 82 written notice to every other party,” but this does not address notice to the nonparty witness. Rule 83 45(a)(4), meanwhile, says that when the subpoena is a documents subpoena the serving party must 84 give notice to the other parties before serving the subpoena. This requirement was designed in part 85 to protect the confidentiality interests of other parties that might be compromised if the nonparty
86 target (e.g., a hospital) produced before the party even learned about the subpoena.

87 If one wanted to build in a notice period, it might be that one would make an exception for 88 testimony at a trial or hearing. Once a trial begins, for example, requiring a significant notice period 89 could present problems, particularly if a jury trial were ongoing.

90 Another notice period feature is that Rule 30(b)(2) says that a subpoena duces tecum is 91 handled under Rule 34, and Rule 45(d)(2)(A) says that if the only thing called for is production of 92 documents or ESI, the person need not appear.

93 But it must be remembered that there is no time limit in Rule 45 at present so long as the 94 subpoena does not require production of documents, making the timing requirements of Rule 45
95 applicable.

96 Another point deserves mention. From time to time, there has been discussion of whether 97 separate rules might address subpoenas designed to achieve different objectives. A basic 98 distinction is between a deposition subpoena and a subpoena to testify in court. Scheduling
99 flexibility is much more likely with the deposition subpoena. And if it is only a document
100 subpoena, Rule 45(d)(2)(A) says no appearance is required.

101 Trying to devise separate and special rules for the varying contexts in which subpoenas are 102 used is probably not worth the effort and complication, however. So any transcendental notice 103 period is likely not suitable either.

104 For the October 2023 meeting, the Subcommittee is inviting reactions to its current 105 approach to the service of subpoena issues.

106 (2) Filing Under Seal

107 The Committee has received a number of submissions urging that the rules explicitly 108 recognize that issuance of a protective order under Rule 26(c) invokes a “good cause” standard
109 quite distinct from the more demanding standards that the common law and First Amendment
110 require for sealing court files. There seems to be little dispute about the reality that the standards
111 are different, though different circuits have articulated and implemented the standards for filing 112 under seal in somewhat distinct ways. The Subcommittee’s current orientation is not to try to 113 displace any of these circuit standards.

114 Instead, when the issues were first raised, it focused on making explicit in the rules the 115 differences between issuance of a protective order regarding materials exchanged through 116 discovery and filing under seal. Two years ago, therefore, it presented the full Committee with 117 sketches of rule provisions to accomplish this goal:

118 Rule 26. Duty to Disclose; General Provisions Governing Discovery 119 * * * * *

120 (c) Protective Orders.

121 * * * * *

122 (4) Filing Under Seal. Filings may be made under seal only under Rule 5(d)(5).

123 The Committee Note could recognize that protective orders – whether entered on 124 stipulation or after full litigation on a motion for a protective order – ought not also authorize filing
125 of “confidential” materials under seal. Instead, the decision whether to authorize such filing under 126 seal should be handled by a motion under new Rule 5(d)(5).

127 Rule 5. Serving and Filing Pleadings and Other Papers

128 * * * * *

129 (d) Filing.

130 * * * * *

131 (5) Filing Under Seal. Unless filing under seal is directed by a federal statute or by
132 these rules, no paper [or other material] may be filed under seal unless [the court
133 determines that] filing under seal is justified and consistent with the common law
134 and First Amendment rights of public access to court filings.

135 This provision could be accompanied by a Committee Note explaining that the rule does 136 not take a position on what exact locution must be used to justify filing under seal, or whether it
137 applies to all pretrial motions. For example, some courts regard “non-merits” or “discovery”
138 motions as not implicating rights of public access comparable to those involved with “merits”
139 motions. Trying to draw such a line in a rule would likely prove difficult, and might alter the rules 140 in some circuits.

141 One starting point is that since 2000, Rule 5(d)(1)(A) has directed that discovery materials
142 not be filed until “used in the proceeding or the court orders filing.” Exchanges through discovery 143 subject to a protective order therefore do not directly implicate filing under seal.

144 Another starting point here is that there are federal statutes and rules that call for sealing.
145 The False Claims Act is a prominent example of such a statute. Within the rules, there are also 146 provisions that call for submission of materials to the court without guaranteeing public access.
147 Rule 26(b)(5)(B) obligates a party that has received materials through discovery and then been 148 notified that the producing party inadvertently produced privileged materials to return or sequester 149 the materials, but also says the receiving party may “promptly present the information to court 150 under seal for a determination of the [privilege] claim.”

151 There is a lingering issue about what constitutes “filing.” Rule 5(d)(1)(A) says that “[a]ny
152 paper after the complaint that is required to be served must be filed no later than a reasonable time
153 after service.” One would think that an application to the court for a ruling on privilege under Rule 154 26(b)(5)(B) should be served on the party (or nonparty) that asserted the privilege claim. Having 155 given the notice required by the rule, it is surely aware of the contents of the allegedly privileged 156 materials, so service of the motion (including the sealed information) would not be inconsistent
157 with the privilege. And it is conceivable that should the court conclude the materials are indeed
158 privileged its decision could be reviewed on appeal, presumably meaning that the sealed materials 159 themselves should somehow be included in the record. Perhaps they would be regarded as 160 “lodged” rather than filed.

161 Rule 5.2(d) also has provisions on filing under seal to implement privacy protections. In 162 somewhat the same vein, Rule 5.2(c) limits access to electronic files in Social Security appeals 163 and immigration cases.

164 Rule 79 also may bear on these issues. Rule 79(d) directs the clerk to keep “records required 165 by the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts with the approval of the 166 Judicial Conference.”

167 Finally, it is worth noting that it appears there are different degrees of sealing. Beyond 168 ordinary sealing, there may be more aggressive sealing for information that is “highly 169 confidential,” or some similar designation. And national security concerns may in exceptional
170 circumstances call for even stricter confidentiality protections. It is not clear that a Civil Rule 171 adopting these distinctions is necessary or appropriate.

172 Uniform Procedures for Filing Under Seal and Unsealing

173 Many of the submissions to the Committee have gone well beyond urging that the rules
174 recognize the diverging standards for protective orders and filing under seal. Indeed, since most 175 recognize that the courts are already aware of this difference in standards, one might say that the 176 main objective of the current proposals is to promote nationally uniform procedures for deciding 177 whether to authorize filing under seal. At least some judges seem receptive to efforts to standardize 178 the handling of decisions whether to permit filing under seal.

179 These proposals contain a variety of procedures for handling sealed filings. One submission
180 (22-CV-A, from the Sedona Conference) contains a model rule that is about seven pages long.
181 Another (21-CV-T, from the Knight First Amendment Institute at Columbia University) attaches
182 a compilation of local rules regarding sealing from all or almost all district courts that is about 100
183 pages long. Some of the local rules are quite elaborate, and other districts give little or no attention 184 to sealed court filings in their local rules.

185 There does presently seem to be considerable variety in local rules on filing under seal.
186 Adopting a set of nationally uniform procedures could introduce more consistency in the treatment
187 of such issues, but also would likely conflict with the local rules of at least some courts.

188 One more moving part should be noted. Two years ago, the Subcommittee paused its work 189 on the sealing issues because the Administrative Office had inaugurated a project on sealing of 190 court records. The pause was to avoid possibly conflicting with or complicating this project’s

191 efforts. Early this year, we were advised that this ongoing project should not cause us to stay our 192 hands. Though the precise contours of the project are not entirely clear, it seems now to be 193 addressing only the manner in which the clerk’s office manages materials filed under seal, not the 194 decision whether or not to authorize filing under seal. Whether the dividing line between the 195 decision to seal in the first place and later unsealing is crystal clear might be debated.

196 The Subcommittee is uncertain how far to venture into prescribing uniform procedures.
197 Although the various proposals received so far have urged the adoption of a new Rule 5.3 on filing
198 under seal, the Subcommittee’s inclination is instead to treat these procedural issues within the 199 framework of existing Rule 5(d). Though there are rules addressed to only one kind of motion
200 (e.g., Rule 37 on motions to compel; Rule 50 on motions for judgment as a matter of law; Rule 56 201 on motions for summary judgment; and Rule 59 on motions for a new trial), motions to seal do not 202 seem of similar moment, so that a whole rule devoted to them does not seem warranted.

203 At the same time, the Rule 5(d) approach sketched above could be adapted to include
204 various features suggested by submissions received by the Committee. The following offers a 205 variety of alternative provisions on which the Subcommittee hopes to receive reactions from the 206 full Committee, building on the sketch presented above.

207 Rule 5. Serving and Filing Pleadings and Other Papers

208 * * * * *

209 (d) Filing.

210 * * * * *

211 (5) Filing Under Seal. Unless filing under seal is directed by a federal statute or by
212 these rules, no paper [or other material] may be filed under seal unless [the court
213 determines that] filing under seal is justified and consistent with the common law
214 and First Amendment rights of public access to court filings. The following 215 procedures apply to a motion to seal:

216 (i) [Unless the court orders otherwise.] The motion must not be filed under seal;

217 Many urge that motions to seal themselves be included in the public docket and open to 218 public inspection. But there may be circumstances in which even that openness could produce 219 unfortunate results. The bracketed phrase would take account of those situations. The rule could 220 specify something more about what the motion should include, but that seems unnecessary given 221 the rule’s invocation of common law and First Amendment limitations in filing in court under seal.
222 A number of submissions provide that sealing orders be “narrowly tailored.” But that seems 223 implicit in the invocation of the existing limitations on filing under seal.

224 In the same vein, the proposal by some that there be “findings” to support an order to seal
225 seems an unnecessary addition. Except for court trials governed by Rule 52, there are few findings
226 requirements in the rules. (Rule 23(b)(3) does seem to have such a requirement because the court 227 may certify a class only if it finds that the predominance and superiority prongs of the rule are 228 satisfied.) Again, once the common law and First Amendment standards are specified as criteria

229 for deciding a motion to seal, adding a findings requirement seems unnecessary. Perhaps it would 230 be useful were frequent appellate review anticipated, but appellate review of discovery-related 231 rulings is rare, and there are no similar findings requirements for such rulings.

232 A potential problem here is that the party that wants to file the materials may not itself be 233 in a position to make the showing required to justify sealing. For example, if the party that wants 234 to file the materials obtained them through discovery from somebody else, the entity capable of 235 making the required showing is not the one that wants to file these items. (This may often be true.)

236 One possibility might be to direct that the parties confer about the motion to seal before 237 presenting it to the court, as is presently required for a motion to compel under Rule 37(a)(1). But 238 the motion to seal situation may be quite different from the motion to compel situation. Party
239 agreement is not sufficient to support sealing if the common law or First Amendment requirements 240 are not met, while party agreement is almost always sufficient to resolve discovery disputes.
241 Indeed, party agreement was a motivating factor behind the certification requirements of Rule 242 37(a)(1).

243 In a sense, there may often be two antagonistic parties wanting different things. Often the 244 party that wants to make the filing is indifferent to whether it is under seal, perhaps even favoring 245 public filing. It's another party (or perhaps a nonparty that responded to a subpoena) that wants 246 the court to seal the confidential materials. Conferring might simplify the court's task in such 247 circumstances, but it does not promise to relieve the court of the ultimate duty to make a decision 248 on the motion to seal.

249 (ii) Upon filing a motion to seal, the moving party may file the materials under 250 [temporary] {provisional} seal[, providing that it also files a redacted
251 version of the materials];

252 Some of the proposals forbid a court ruling on a motion to seal for a set period (say 7 days)
253 after the motion is filed and docketed. But it appears that the reality is that many such filings are 254 in relation to motions or other proceedings that make such a “waiting period” impractical. The 255 filing of a redacted version of the materials sought to be sealed seems to provide some measure of 256 public access.

257 (iii) The moving party must give notice to any person who may claim a 258 confidentiality interest in the materials to be filed;

259 This provision is designed to permit nonparties to be heard on whether the confidential
260 materials should be sealed. Perhaps it should be a requirement of (i) above, and it might also 261 include some sort of meet-and-confer requirement.

262 Alternative 1

263 (iv) If the motion to seal is not granted, the moving party may withdraw the 264 materials, but may rely on only the redacted version of the materials;

265 Alternative 2

266 (iv) If the motion to seal is not granted, the [temporarily] {provisionally} sealed
267 materials must be unsealed;

268 The question what should be done if the motion to seal is denied is tricky. One answer
269 (Alternative 2) is that the temporary seal comes off and the materials are opened to the public.
270 Unless that happens, it would seem that the court could not rely on the sealed portions in deciding 271 the motion or other matter before the court. On the other hand, it seems implicit that if the motion 272 is granted the court can consider the sealed portions in making its rulings. Whether that might 273 somehow change the public access calculus might be debated.

274 Things get trickier if the motion is denied and the party claiming confidentiality is not the 275 one that wanted to file the materials. To permit that party (or nonparty) claiming confidentiality to 276 snatch back the materials would deprive the party that filed them of the opportunity to pursue the 277 result it sought in filing the materials in the first place.

278 (v) The motion to seal must indicate a date when the sealed material may be 279 unsealed. Unless the court orders otherwise, the materials must be unsealed 280 on that date.

281 This is a recurrent proposal. It cannot reasonably be adopted along with the alternative 282 (below) that the materials must be returned to party that filed them, or to the one claiming 283 confidentiality, at the termination of the litigation.

284 (vi) Any [party] {interested person} [member of the public] may move to unseal
285 materials filed under seal.

286 Various proposals have been submitted along these lines. One caution at the outset is that 287 such a provision seems to overlap with Rule 24's intervention criteria. Rule 24 has been employed
288 to permit intervention by nonparties to seek to unseal sealed materials in the court's files. See 8A
289 Fed. Prac. & Pro. § 2044.1.

290 Such intervention attempts may sometimes raise standing issues. A recent example is U.S.
291 ex rel. Hernandez v. Team Finance, L.L.C., ___ F.4th ___, 2023 WL 5618996 (5th Cir., Aug. 31, 292 2023), a False Claims Act case in which the district court denied a motion to intervene by a "health
293 care economist." The intervenor sought to unseal information about health care pricing in an action 294 alleging that defendant routinely billed governments for doctor examinations and care services that 295 did not actually occur. The court of appeals concluded that "violations of the public right to access 296 judicial records and proceedings and to gather news are cognizable injuries-in-fact sufficient to 297 establish standing." But the court also remanded for a determination whether the application to 298 intervene was untimely under Rule 24(b).

299 Because there is an existing body of precedent on intervention for these purposes, 300 providing some parallel right by rule looks dubious. On the one hand, the notion that every 301 "member of the public" can intervene may be too broad. Rule 24(b)(1), which is ordinarily relied 302 upon for such intervention to unseal, also has other requirements that might not be included in a 303 new rule.

304 The role of nonparty confidentiality claimants (mentioned above) seems distinguishable.
305 Particularly if their confidential information was obtained under the auspices of the court (e.g., by 306 subpoena), it would seem to follow that they should have some avenue to protect those interests 307 when a party sought to file those materials in court. (It might be mentioned that most of the 308 submissions seem to take no notice of the possibility that nonparties might favor filing under seal.)

309 (vii) Upon final termination of the action, any party that filed sealed materials 310 may retrieve them from the clerk.

311 This provision would not seem to fit with a requirement (mentioned above) that there be a 312 prescribed date for unsealing the material. Indeed, unless there is some sort of timeliness 313 requirement for requests by nonparties to unseal these materials (see Rule 24), permitting them to 314 be withdrawn would complicate matters. Must an application to unseal be made during the 315 pendency of the action? Must clerk's offices retain sealed materials forever?

316 An alternative proposal made in at least one submission is that all sealed materials be 317 unsealed within 60 days after "final termination" of the action. If that "final termination" is on 318 appeal, it may be difficult for the district court clerk's office to know when to unseal. Imposing
319 such a duty on the clerk's office, rather than empowering the party that filed the material to request
320 its return based on a showing that final termination of the action has occurred seems more 321 reasonable.

322 Alternatively, as reflected in at least one local rule, the clerk could be directed to destroy
323 the sealed materials after final termination of the action. That would also present the monitoring 324 problem mentioned just above.

325 * * * * *

326 It is worth noting that these proposals have also prompted at least one submission opposing 327 adoption of any such provisions. See 21-CV-G from the Lawyers for Civil Justice, arguing that 328 such amendments would unduly limit judges' discretion regarding confidential information, 329 conflict with statutory privacy standards, and stoke unprecedented satellite litigation.

330 For the present, the Subcommittee is seeking guidance from the full Committee on whether 331 these procedural provisions hold promise, and whether others should be considered.

332 (3) Mandatory Initial Discovery Pilot Findings

333 The agenda book for the March 2023 Advisory Committee meeting contained the very 334 thorough report done by FJC Research on the Mandatory Initial Discovery Project in the N.D. Ill.
335 and D. Ariz.

336 The report (even without appendices) occupied about 100 pages of the March agenda book.
337 In March, the Subcommittee undertook to review the report to determine whether it identified
338 specific possible amendments to the initial disclosure regime of Rule 26(a)(1)(A) that warranted 339 further study.

340 A bit of background on initial disclosure issues seems helpful. In 1991, this Committee
341 proposed adoption of a new Rule 26(a)(1) initial disclosure requirement. That proposal prompted
342 considerable resistance. Ultimately Rule 26(a)(1)(A) was adopted, but with an opt-out feature 343 permitting districts to elect whether to follow the “national” rule. The rule was not limited to 344 disclosure of favorable information, but instead required disclosure of information relevant to 345 matters alleged with particularity, even if unfavorable to the disclosing party. Three Supreme Court
346 Justices dissented from adoption of the disclosure rule, largely on the ground that it was out of step 347 with the American adversarial litigation system. See Amendments to the Federal Rules of Civil 348 Procedure, 146 F.R.D. 402, 507-09 (1993) (dissenting opinion of Justice Scalia, joined by Justices 349 Thomas and Souter). The disclosure rule went into effect in 1993.

350 Considerable diversity among districts emerged, prompting preparation of a thorough 351 study of divergent practices in various districts. See D. Stienstra, Implementation of Disclosure in 352 United States District Courts, With Specific Attention to Courts’ Responses to Selected
353 Amendments to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26 (FJC 1998). During the same general period
354 of time, districts were obliged to develop cost and delay plans pursuant to the Civil Justice Reform
355 Act, and the RAND Corporation intensely studied the results of those projects. Finally, in 1997, at 356 the request of the Advisory Committee, the FJC did a very thorough study of a variety of discovery 357 issues, including several affected by rule amendments that went into effect in 1993. See T.
358 Willging, J. Shapard, D. Stienstra & D. Miletich, Discovery and Disclosure Practice, Problems, 359 and Proposals for Change (FJC 1997).

360 In 1998, the Advisory Committee proposed amendments to Rule 26(a)(1) that would 361 remove the opt-out provision for district courts and restore national uniformity, but also limit initial 362 disclosure to information the disclosing party “may use to support” its claims or defenses. There 363 was considerable resistance to the national uniformity features of this amendment proposal, 364 including some from district court judges, but it was adopted and went into effect in 2000. The 365 rule has remained essentially unchanged since then. From time to time, there have been 366 expressions of satisfaction and dissatisfaction with the present rule.

367 The MIDP was a careful effort to investigate the potential effect of more demanding initial 368 requirements. It was implemented on a voluntary basis by judges in the District of Arizona and the 369 Northern District of Illinois. Some judges of these courts elected not to participate. Among other 370 things, the pilot did not limit required initial discovery to information on which the party providing 371 discovery would rely, and it also required the filing of responsive pleadings even from parties
372 intending to file Rule 12(b) motions (something not explicitly required in the 1991 proposed rule 373 or the 1993 rule as adopted).

374 The FJC study focused on cases filed between Jan. 1, 2014, and March 12, 2020 (the day 375 before the pandemic emergency declaration). “Comparison” districts were selected for purposes
376 of comparison – the S.D.N.Y. for the N.D. Ill. and the E.D. Cal. for the D. Ariz. The FJC report
377 has very detailed information about the study, and deserves close study. This agenda book includes 378 a link to the full FJC report. But some overall reactions may provide a useful introduction.

379 One important take away is that the project had a statistically significant effect on case
380 duration – “the pilot shortened disposition times for cases subject to the MIDP.” But it is not

381 possible to say that the study of these two volunteer districts provides a firm foundation to support 382 national rulemaking at this time.

383 The members of the Subcommittee carefully reviewed the report and explored its 384 implications during their Aug. 29 meeting. Ultimately, the conclusion was that though the pilot
385 projects were admirable undertakings and the FJC analysis was excellent, there is not a solid 386 foundation for further initial disclosure provisions. It remains true that there is considerable 387 resistance in the bar, and perhaps to some extent within courts. So though it was important to do 388 this experiment it does not seem to justify any rules effort now.

389 The Subcommittee therefore recommends that the topic be dropped from the Committee’s 390 agenda.

391 (4) Discovery in Cross-Border Situations

392 In March, Judge Michael Baylson (E.D. Pa.), a former member of the Advisory Committee, 393 submitted 23-CV-G, which was included in the agenda book but did not receive substantial 394 attention during that meeting. Since submitting that proposal, he and Professor Gensler (another 395 former member of this Committee) have prepared an article that will soon appear in Judicature
396 entitled “Should the Federal Rules Be Amended to Address Cross-Border Discovery?” A draft of 397 that article is included in this agenda book. It proposes that the Committee “initiate a project to 398 examine how the Civil Rules might be amended to better guide judges and attorneys through the 399 cross-border discovery maze.”

400 The Sedona Conference has submitted a letter in support of this project (23-CV-H), citing 401 three of its publications: The Sedona Conference International Principles of Discovery, Disclosure
402 & Data Protection (December 2011); The Sedona Conference International Litigation Principles 403 on Discovery, Disclosure & Data Protecting in Civil Litigation (Transitional Edition) (January 404 2017); and The Sedona Conference Commentary and Principles on Jurisdictional Conflicts Over 405 Transfers of Personal Data Across Borders (April 2020).

406 Some background may be helpful for Committee members:

407 The Hague Convention, 28 U.S.C. § 1781: One starting point is the Hague Convention on 408 Taking Evidence Abroad. It was drafted in the 1960s, and the U.S. became a party in 1972. The 409 goal was to facilitate and regularize the taking of evidence in one country for use before the courts
410 of another country. But it also had built-in constraints. Of particular importance, it authorized 411 countries that joined the Convention also to adopt “blocking statutes” to prevent certain types of 412 discovery on their soil, in part because U.S. discovery is so much broader than parallel evidence-
413 gathering in the rest of the world. Elaboration on this point is easy, but the basic point is that U.S.
414 discovery is unique in the world. Some might view U.S. discovery as an “imperialistic” endeavor.

415 For some time after 1972, many American federal courts were presented with arguments
416 that they would have to use the Convention instead of the Federal Rules, and counter-arguments
417 that the Convention’s procedures were cumbersome and slow, so that ordinary American discovery
418 was preferable. In Societe Nationale Industrielle Aerospatiale v. U.S. District Court, 482 U.S. 522
419 (1987), the Supreme Court essentially rejected the requirement of first resort to the Convention
420 procedures and directed that federal courts evaluate a number of factors in deciding whether to use

421 the Convention or ordinary American discovery. Justice Blackmun partially dissented, arguing 422 that comity principles should counsel greater deference to the Convention practices. But over the 423 years many American lawyers have argued that the Convention is costly and slow.

424         Insisting on discovery American style could present serious problems. On that, consider a 425 pre-Convention case, Societe Internationale v. Rogers, 357 U.S. 197 (1958), in which a Swiss
426 company suing in the U.S. faced dismissal as a sanction for failure to produce documents it said 427 Swiss law forbade it to produce. The Supreme Court regarded this outcome as raising Due Process
428 issues, because it seemed that the company could not comply with the American production order
429 without violating Swiss criminal law.

430         Blocking statutes could produce the same sort of problem if they blocked evidence
431 collection needed for American litigation. Some experience suggests that a collaborative approach 432 could be more efficient and effective. An example is Salt River Project Agricultural Improve. & 433 Power Dist., 303 F.Supp.3d 1004 (D. Ariz. 2018), a decision by Judge David Campbell, a former 434 Discovery Subcommittee Chair, Advisory Committee Chair, and Standing Committee Chair.

435         In that case, there were two defendants, one from France, which has adopted a blocking 436 statute, and a related corporate entity from Canada. Plaintiff sought production of a variety of 437 materials from both defendants. The French defendant took the initiative to have its production 438 handled under the Convention, urging the appointment of a private attorney in France as 439 “commissioner” to oversee the production in France. It pointed out “it would violate the French
440 blocking statute if it produced these documents and ESI outside the Hague Convention
441 procedures.” That could subject the company to up to six months imprisonment and a fine of up
442 to 90,000 Euros. The French company also made a showing that the actual commissioner process 443 could move efficiently and quickly, and that the Canadian company would produce most (but not 444 all) of the documents it would produce without the need to use Convention procedures, making 445 production by the French defendant less important.

446         Plaintiff opposed the motion, but Judge Campbell granted it, invoking the Aerospatiale
447 factors. This seems an eminently sensible result, and much to be preferred to some sort of face-off 448 between the American courts and the French sovereignty concerns. Judge Baylson had a similar 449 experience in a litigation over which he presided.

450         So it may be that some provision in the Civil Rules stimulating such a balanced approach
451 would pay dividends. On the other hand, some might say that such a provision would not be a real 452 “rule.” For a rule to say a court must always make first use of the Convention seems to run against 453 the main holding of Aerospatiale, and (as with Judge Campbell’s decision) the choice whether to 454 turn first to the Convention would seem to depend on the factors outlined by the Supreme Court 455 in that case.

456         In 1988, an amendment proposal to provide direction for the federal courts’ handling of 457 discovery for use in American cases was published for public comment. After the public comment 458 period was completed, the proposal was revised, approved by the Standing Committee and the 459 Judicial Conference and sent to the Supreme Court for its review. While the proposal was before 460 the Court, the Department of State transmitted a set of objections from the United Kingdom to the 461 Court. The Court then returned the proposed amendments to the rulemakers for further review, 462 and no further action occurred at that time.

463 This is relatively ancient history. Since 1990, very great changes have occurred in cross-
464 border litigation, and the advent of the Digital Age and E-Discovery mean that the importance and 465 implications of Hague Convention procedures may be viewed differently.

466 28 U.S.C. § 1782: U.S. discovery for use in proceedings abroad: A companion statute, 28
467 U.S.C. § 1782, authorizes U.S. discovery to provide evidence for use in “a proceeding in a foreign 468 or international tribunal” if the person from whom discovery is sought “resides or is found” in the 469 district in which discovery is sought. According to Yanbai Andrea Wang, Exporting American 470 Discovery, 87 U. Chi. L. Rev. 2089 (2020), there has been a very considerable uptick in the use of 471 this statute during the 21st century.

472 It seems that this statute was intended to some extent to prompt other countries to relax
473 their limitations on obtaining evidence. Some developments suggest that other countries are 474 relaxing their previous antagonism toward discovery. An example might be found in the 475 ELI/UNIDROIT Model European Rules of Civil Procedure (2020), which recognize a right for 476 parties to obtain evidence.

477 As with § 1781, the lower courts entertained a variety of limiting interpretations of this 478 statute. In Intel Corp. v. Advanced Micro Devices, Inc., 542 U.S. 241 (2004), the Supreme Court 479 gave a relatively broad reading to the statute and, as with § 1781, emphasized that district courts
480 have to use sound discretion in deciding whether to grant applications for discovery under this 481 statute. It held that the petitioner in the case was an “interested person” able to utilize the discovery 482 provisions even though it was not a formal party to the foreign proceeding. It took a broad view of 483 what is a foreign “tribunal” to include the European Commission (though a private arbitration did 484 not qualify as a “proceeding in a foreign or international tribunal”).

485 One significant limitation under § 1782 is that the party subject to American discovery
486 must be “found” in the district in which the discovery order is sought. Since 2011, the Supreme 487 Court has taken a cautious attitude toward “general jurisdiction” with regard to corporate parties.
488 But the Second Circuit has held that being “found” in the district under § 1782 is broader than the 489 “general jurisdiction” concept applied for purposes of due process limits on personal jurisdiction.
490 See In re del Valle Ruiz, 939 F.3d 520 (2d Cir. 2019); see also In re Eli Lilly & Co., 37 F.4th 160
491 (4th Cir. 2022).

493 It should be apparent that much learning and study would be necessary as part of a project 494 on cross-border discovery, whether limited the Hague Convention aspects or also considering the 495 use of American discovery to provide evidence for litigation outside this country.

496 During its Aug. 29 meeting, the Subcommittee had an introductory discussion of these 497 issues. This report is partly to invite reactions from other members of the full Committee on 498 experiences and concerns about these topics. In particular, it might be important to ascertain 499 whether there are international community concerns of which we should be aware, perhaps like

500 the UK concerns relayed by the Department of State a third of a century ago. Taking on such a 501 project presently seems too time-intensive, but surveying its contours could be a good beginning.

502 Notes of Aug. 29 Subcommittee Meeting

503 Discovery Subcommittee
504 Advisory Committee on Civil Rules
505 Teams Meeting
506 Aug. 29, 2023

507 On Aug. 29, 2023, the Discovery Subcommittee of the Advisory Committee on Civil Rules
508 held met via Teams. Participants included Chief Judge David Godbey (Chair, Discovery 509 Subcommittee), Judge Robin Rosenberg (Chair, Advisory Committee), Judge Jennifer Boal, David
510 Burman, Joseph Sellers, Ariana Tadler, Helen Witt, Carmelita Shinn, Prof. Richard Marcus
511 (Reporter, Advisory Committee), Prof. Andrew Bradt (Associate Reporter, Advisory Committee), 512 Prof. Edward Cooper (Consultant, Advisory Committee), and Allison Bruff (A.O. Rules Staff).

513 Chief Judge Godbey welcomed and thanked the participants for making time in their busy
514 schedules to participate in this meeting and review the rather voluminous materials circulated 515 before the meeting.

516 Rule 45(b)(1)
517 Manner of Service

518 The issue was introduced as involving actual uncertainty about what is required to satisfy
519 the rule’s directive that service depends on “delivering a copy to the named person.” Some courts
520 have interpreted this provision to require in-hand delivery of the subpoena to the witness. Others
521 have found that alternative means suffice. The need for specifics may be greater with nonparty
522 witnesses than party witnesses. Indeed, lawyers for represented parties might strongly prefer that 523 the other side not serve subpoenas on their officers and employees but instead work out some 524 modus vivendi, particularly in regard to depositions. On the other hand, with subpoenas directing 525 nonparty witnesses to testify on short notice at a hearing or trial in court it may be urgently 526 important to ensure actual notice to the witness. There are many gradations in between.

527 One could debate whether this is a real problem requiring a rules solution. Given the 528 likelihood of a negotiated method for deposition discovery, it is likely that with party-affiliated 529 witnesses agreements on timing and location and the like usually are dispositive and formal service
530 is not needed. Yet in litigation in which the parties are playing “hardball” an impasse may arise. It
531 does seem that some creative methods of service have been adopted. For example, a recent news
532 story described a situation in which a witness located in Singapore was subpoenaed by a
533 bankruptcy court in New York via a tweet. The court later quashed the subpoena on the ground 534 that the witness had renounced his U.S. citizenship and therefore was beyond the jurisdiction of 535 the court, not on the ground that no in-hand service had occurred. But the manner of service issue 536 has repeatedly been advanced as a topic for rulemaking, starting nearly 20 years ago.

537 A very thorough research memo from Rules Law Clerk Chris Pryby demonstrated that the 538 methods of service employed in state courts around the nation fall into no set pattern, even though 539 many of the states have subpoena rules modeled on Rule 45. For discussion purposes, various 540 possible amendment approaches were offered: (1) requiring in-hand service in all instances; (2)
541 adding service by U.S. mail with return receipt or by commercial carrier; (3) authorizing service

542 by several of the means authorized in Rule 4 for service of initial process; or (4) authorizing a 543 court order or local rule to provide for additional means of service.

544 An initial reaction from a Subcommittee member was that this problem comes up
545 frequently enough to justify resolving the ambiguity under the current rule. An example in this 546 member's experience involved service by overnight mail on a nonparty witness who did not show
547 up, leading to a court hearing in which the witness contended that the service by overnight mail
548 was ineffective under the rule. That experience prompted the member's law firm to organize a 549 presentation to the firm about how to solve this problem. "A lot of money is spent researching this 550 issue that ought not be spent with a clear rule."

551 Another member agreed. Clarity would be helpful. But there might be some concern about 552 whether the Rules Enabling Act limits the rulemaking possibilities. A response to this concern was 553 that, given the geographic limitations of current Rule 45(c) there should not be any Enabling Act 554 constraints.

555 Another point made was that the pandemic lock-down has had a pervasive effect on the 556 behavior of litigants and lawyers and witnesses that matters in this context. In the day of "virtual 557 depositions" rather than in-person depositions, it seems odd to insist on face-to-face service of 558 subpoenas.

559 Another member agreed with the first two. This member has on occasion faced the same 560 problem. Increasingly there are entities that don't actually have a brick-and-mortar existence.
561 Similar issues arose in the Advisory Committee's CARES Act discussions about when Rule 4
562 service requirements for initial process should be relaxed in emergency circumstances. The key 563 should be what the Constitution requires – was the means of service used reasonably calculated to 564 give notice to the person served? In the instance this member confronted, initial service was 565 achieved via a tweet, and the fact of receipt could be demonstrated by actions the party took 566 thereafter, showing actual notice.

567 A judge observed that judges see a "steady diet" of disputes about whether subpoenas were 568 served in the proper manner. These situations can arise when the target of the subpoena is actively 569 resisting, and also when there is no response at all and the court is asked to take action against the 570 nonresponding person. Clarity would be welcome. Incorporating provisions from Rule 4 would be 571 welcome.

572 Another judge suggested that combining two approaches might be better yet – invoke
573 suitable provisions from Rule 4 and add explicit authority for the court to authorize service by a 574 different means. At the same time, it might be risky to insist that the rule say the means selected 575 be "reasonably calculated to give actual notice." That invites disputes.

576 Another member spoke up in favor of retaining the "reasonably calculated" language. One 577 alternative would be to indicate in the rule that the court should choose an alternative means 578 "reasonably calculated."

579 The possibility of using the "reasonably calculated" language from the Supreme Court's 580 old Mullane decision drew a caution. The rule certainly should not require actual notice; the Court
581 did not say that was required to satisfy due process. Proof of actual notice could be valuable to a

582 court asked to sanction failure to respond, but insisting on “actual notice” could introduce serious 583 problems.

584 The discussion of this topic was summed up as showing that the Subcommittee’s report to 585 the full Committee should recognize that clarification of the rule (or expansion, if one views things 586 that way) is a desirable way to remove grounds for disputes. That need not mean that an 587 amendment should be prepared for publication in mid 2024 (though that might make sense). The 588 preliminary drafts now out for public comment are likely to prompt a good deal of comment, and 589 the Advisory Committee’s Spring meeting may be mainly occupied with determining how or 590 whether to proceed with those.

591 Filing Under Seal

592 This topic was introduced as having returned to the active Subcommittee docket this year
593 after being put on hold two years ago due to the creation of an A.O. task force on sealed filings.
594 On June 5 (the day before the Standing Committee’s June meeting), the reporters and Allison Bruff
595 (and the Criminal Rules Committee reporters) met with three representatives of the A.O. task force.
596 Though the exact contours of that project remain somewhat unclear, it is mainly concerned with 597 how materials filed under seal are handled rather than with the process of deciding whether to 598 authorize filing under seal.

599 Before putting this project on hold, the Subcommittee had developed possible amendments
600 to Rules 26(c) and 5(d) recognizing that the grounds for a protective order regarding materials 601 exchanged in discovery are significantly different from the demanding criteria for filing under seal.
602 There seems little debate about this difference, and the courts recognize it, though it seems to be 603 phrased differently in different circuits. The amendment ideas developed in the past were designed 604 not to change any circuit’s formulation.

605 The abiding question is whether to go beyond this sort of general (and widely accepted)
606 differentiation and prescribe uniform procedures. The Advisory Committee has received quite a 607 number of proposals for specifics in the rules, and some in the judiciary think that more uniform
608 procedures would be desirable. Such specifics could add considerable length to any rule. As an 609 illustration, a draft rule submitted by the Sedona Conference (22-CV-A), prepared in late 2021, 610 fills about seven pages. That could make the motion-to-seal rule one of the longest in the rule book.

611 Part of the background is that there is a great deal of variety in local rules about motions to 612 seal, and that any national rule would therefore be likely to conflict with some at least some local 613 rules. It may be that various local practices result from local differences that a national rule should 614 not override, at least unless there is a good reason for doing so.

615 Particular issues include the practicalities of giving lawyers enough time to decide what to 616 file, determining whether filings sought to be sealed can be “provisionally” sealed before the court
617 rules on whether sealing is authorized and, if so, whether the filing party can “take back” the item
618 if filing under seal is not approved. Another question is whether a redacted version of the document 619 must also be filed and open to public inspection. Other concerns include whether the duration of 620 the seal must be determined at the time of sealing, and how to protect nonparty interests in 621 confidentiality of materials a party seeks to file.

622 A member began by saying that the Rule 5(d) approach is appealing, but that we should do
623 more. In terms of criteria for sealing, there is no reason for a rule to intrude. Indeed, since some 624 circuits regard “non-merits” or “discovery” motions as not invoking a public right of access but 625 others may not, it is probably best not to try to get into that area.

626 At the same time, insisting on a ruling in advance of filing is impractical in the high-
627 pressure world of litigation. That does support the “provisional” filing under seal idea, but does 628 not necessarily indicate whether the confidential document may be withdrawn if leave to seal is 629 denied. Perhaps having a redacted version in the file would provide a middle ground – the party
630 that filed the document found not to justify sealing could rely on the portions of the redacted 631 document that are in the court’s file but not the confidential parts.

632 Another member agreed that some sort of standardization is a laudable goal. But some sort 633 of invitation for public comment on motions to seal (beyond having motions to seal in the court’s 634 docket like other motions) seems unwise. “The press is capable of following the cases the readers
635 want to hear about.” Motions to seal should not be treated differently from other motions. There
636 is no practical reason why the decision on the motion to seal must be made in advance. Redaction 637 after the fact suffices in more than 99% of the cases.

638 A judge cautioned that getting into the details might lead to a slippery slope towards 639 something like the seven-page model rule submitted to the Advisory Committee. If we start to get 640 into that sort of detail it is difficult to determine where to stop.

641 Another judge echoed what the practitioners said – this tends to come up when the filing
642 deadline rolls around, and can’t be addressed productively much before then. So a waiting period 643 on deciding the motion to seal does not sound workable.

644 Another reality should be kept in mind – often the party seeking to file the document is not 645 the one best situated to explain why it is confidential and should be filed under seal. In commercial 646 or patent litigation, that is often true of items obtained by one side through discovery that it wants
647 to file in relation to a motion, but the other side (or even a nonparty) has confidentiality concerns 648 that should be considered in regard to the sealing motion.

649 Another concern was the impact on the clerk’s office of some sort of public notice. The 650 reality is that public notice can open a can of worms, or one might say of court “gadflies.” A
651 caution was also offered about proceeding far with specifics about rulings on motions to seal. It 652 was noted that one proposal seemed to seek a separate posting of motions to seal – not just in the 653 court file – but it seems that the consensus of the Subcommittee is that such a requirement would 654 not only burden the clerk’s office but also invite other difficulties.

655 A question was asked: Can a search of CM/ECF locate all motions to seal. It seems that at 656 this moment that is not possible, but it may soon be possible. That might bear on whether there 657 would be any need for separate notice to the public.

658 The discussion seemed to assume that the motion to seal itself should be public, and indeed
659 several of the proposals received by the Advisory Committee say so. But a judge reported that 660 there have been ex parte applications for leave to file under seal that were themselves under seal.
661 One should be cautious of these details, which might handcuff judges.

662 An attorney member reacted this discussion by saying that the points made suggest a 663 cautious approach.

664 The discussion was summed up as supporting a report to the Advisory Committee that the 665 basic question of sealing court files is important, but also that caution is indicated. For the Fall 666 meeting, perhaps a mock up of a rule with some of these specifics included would provide a basis
667 for discussion by the full Advisory committee. Getting reactions from the entire Committee would 668 be valuable to the Subcommittee in moving forward on this issue.

669 Mandatory Initial Discovery Pilot
670 and Possible Changes to Rule 26(a)(1)

671 This topic was introduced as involving an excellent and detailed FJC study of the 672 Mandatory Initial Discovery Pilot conducted in the N.D. Ill. and the D. Az. This pilot project was 673 initially spearheaded by the Chairs of the Standing Committee (first David Campbell and then 674 John Bates). It was hoped there would be four or five districts that would participate, but eventually 675 only the N.D. Ill. (home court of Judge Dow, Chair of the Advisory Committee) and the D. Az.
676 (home court of Judge Campbell) participated, and only some judges in each district participated.
677 (It might be noted also that the state courts in Arizona have a fairly aggressive form of initial 678 disclosure introduced in the 1990s.)

679 One part of the introduction was that the initial roll-out of the Rule 26(a)(1) disclosure
680 requirement was fairly bumpy. After public comment, the proposal was first retracted, and then 681 adopted by the Advisory Committee with an opt-out feature permitting individual districts to 682 choose not to follow the national rule. That diversity of treatment prompted a re-examination of 683 the initial disclosure requirement leading to a 1998 preliminary draft adopting a more constrained 684 but nationally uniform disclosure requirement (only applying to information that the disclosing 685 party intended to use in support of its claims or defenses) that was adopted over some opposition
686 from some judges, effective 2000. Since then, the national rule has not been significantly changed.

687 The pilot project, in a sense, followed up on the Duke Conference in May 2010, which was 688 a foundation for the 2015 discovery amendments and also gave rise to consideration of whether a 689 more ambitious disclosure regime would provide benefits in terms of litigation duration and cost.

690 The data on the pilot project show that there was some notable (though limited) effect on 691 litigation duration. They also show that some lawyers (notably more among the experienced than 692 the younger lawyers) had a favorable reaction to the pilot project approach. At the same time, the 693 effects were somewhat modest, and there seemed to be little or no clarion call for strengthening 694 the initial disclosure rule. The question, then, is whether some specific rule changes might be 695 indicated from this somewhat subdued report.

696 One member read the FJC report carefully when it was first before the full Committee.
697 Though it might be that there are some nuggets in the report that justify serious consideration of 698 rule changes, on reflection it does not seem that there are any in this instance. And it seems that 699 the pilot project prompted a fairly negative reaction in the bar in the places where it was 700 implemented, a difficult foundation for a rule change.

701 Another member concurred. “Were we to propose something specific, the obvious question
702 would be what in the study provides support for making such a change.” The report is frankly 703 inconclusive. That’s in no way a criticism of the report, it’s simply a frank recognition of what 704 was found out.

705 The consensus was that the pilot project was a good idea and the FJC study was exactly 706 the sort of solid evaluation that is needed to consider a rule change. But the purpose of a pilot is to 707 evaluate the promise of a rule change, and it’s too difficult to find anything in this effort that 708 provides a ground for a specific rule change. Accordingly, the report to the full Advisory 709 Committee should be that though the effort was worthy, and executed by high caliber work, at the 710 end of the day it does not show that there is a need (or justification) for any specific rule changes.
711 As time passes, and discovery issues evolve, the need to return to Rule 26(a)(1) may return, but 712 for the present this item can be dropped from the agenda.

713 Discovery Outside the U.S.

714 Judge Baylson and Professor Gensler (both former members of the Advisory Committee)
715 have submitted a proposal for rulemaking regarding how district judges approach efforts to do 716 discovery outside this country or efforts to compel parties to cases in this country to provide 717 information from records or people located outside the country for use in American courts. This 718 topic (including the possibility of adopting a new rule addressing these issues) will be examined
719 in some detail in an article by Judge Baylson and Prof. Gensler that is slated to appear in Judicature
720 later this year. The Subcommittee received a draft of that article, which urges the Advisory 721 Committee to develop a project studying the issues.

722 The Sedona Conference has also submitted a brief letter supporting such an effort, noting 723 that it has published several books on these issues and offering to provide assistance.

724 The topic was introduced with some background. Here, as with initial disclosure, there is 725 a history to be noted. The Hague Convention (supported by the United States) established 726 procedures for obtaining evidence from signatory states. But the reality has been for decades that 727 U.S. discovery methods (particularly Rule 34 requests) are very different from the practices of the 728 rest of the world, which require a court order to support document production and have very strict 729 requirements for those seeking such an order.

730 Partly as a consequence of the divergence between U.S. practice and the practice in the rest
731 of the world, the Hague Convention includes authority for signatory nations to refuse to provide 732 some sorts of discovery for use in U.S. litigation (sometimes called “blocking statutes”), or to 733 insist that local procedures be used to obtain evidence in those countries.

734 For a time, there was a difference of opinion in American cases on whether, given the 735 existence of Hague Convention procedures, litigants in American courts should be required to 736 attempt a “first resort” to Convention procedures. In 1987, the Supreme Court, in the Aerospatiale
737 case, rejected the “first resort” requirement, though it also recognized that multiple factors should 738 be considered, with considerable weight placed on comity. Justice Blackmun, in a separate 739 opinion, was more sympathetic to the “first resort” idea.

740           Soon after the Aerospatiale decision, a preliminary draft of rule amendments addressing 741 these issues was published for public comment. From one perspective, these proposed rule 742 amendments seemed to pursue the route taken by Justice Blackmun. But after public comment, the 743 draft was changed, and the Judicial Conference approved and sent to the Supreme Court a revised 744 draft.

745           Meanwhile, the original draft had attracted international attention and prompted some 746 opposition. Specifically, the United Kingdom submitted an opposition to the proposed rule change
747 (focusing on the original proposal, not the one submitted to the Court by the Judicial Conference).
748 This opposition was submitted to the Supreme Court, and it sent the amendments back to the rules
749 committees for further consideration. Eventually no further action occurred on this front.

750           Though that history is informative, it is not a ground for declining to move forward on the 751 current submissions. A great deal has changed in the last third of a century since the earlier rule
752 change was shelved. In particular, the frequency of cross-border litigation has risen. More 753 importantly, the enormous consequences of the Digital Revolution have transformed American 754 discovery and introduced new concerns about privacy and confidentiality, as well as data 755 preservation.

756           And there may be something of a tension between a face off with the rest of the world and 757 productive cooperation. Thus, Judge Baylson handled a litigation in which following the Hague 758 procedures worked effectively. And Judge Campbell similarly did so with a French litigant. It may 759 be that flexibility on the American side could pay large dividends.

760           An initial reaction was that it seems that much of this topic turns on treaties or statutes.
761 There may be little room for a rule to operate. And any such “rule” might really amount to little 762 more than a best practices document.

763           The consensus was that one thing is clear at present – the Advisory Committee is not able 764 to initiate the sort of effort that would be required to address these concerns. The Sedona 765 Conference has several books on the general subject. But that does not mean the members of the 766 Committee are conversant enough with the issues to pursue them now, particularly given the 767 prospect of a heavy workload from the privilege log and Rule 16.1 proposals now out for public 768 comment and the existing subcommittee work also in progress.

769           So the wisest course at present seems to be to introduce the issues to the full Committee
770 during the October meeting. Judge Baylson’s submission came in as the agenda book for the March 771 meeting was being finished, and it was in a sort of appendix to the agenda book for that meeting.
772 But there was no significant discussion of these issues at the March meeting. It may be that few of 773 the other members of the Committee have experience or views, but it would be important to find 774 out about that. In particular, given the prior experience with the United Kingdom, it might be that 775 the Government (through the Department of Justice?) could shed light on current attitudes on this 776 front. This is clearly important, but it’s not clear that there is a valuable role for rules in dealing 777 with this set of problems. Making that determination will require considerable effort.

Introduction

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 45(b)(1) specifies the manner of serving a subpoena to a deponent or witness in a civil case.<sup>1</sup> The Discovery Subcommittee (the “Subcommittee”) of the Advisory Committee on Civil Rules (the “Committee”) is investigating the ambiguity in the rule’s requirement that a copy of a subpoena be “deliver[ed]” to the person named in it.<sup>2</sup> There is a conflict among federal courts over

(1) By Whom and How; Tendering Fees. Any person who is at least 18 years old and not a party may serve a subpoena. Serving a subpoena requires delivering a copy to the named person and, if the subpoena requires that person’s attendance, tendering the fees for 1 day’s attendance and the mileage allowed by law. Fees and mileage need not be tendered when the subpoena issues on behalf of the United States or any of its officers or agencies.

Bates, Chair & Comm. on Rules of Prac. & Proc., Report of the Advisory Committee on Civil Rules, in U.S. CTS., Committee on Practice and Procedure: June 6, 2023, at 784, 803 (2023), https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/2023-06\_standing\_committee\_agenda\_book\_final\_0.pdf.

whether the provision requires personal, in-hand service of the subpoena.<sup>3</sup> The Subcommittee is also investigating a suggestion by Hon. Catherine P. McEwen to allow delivery of a subpoena by overnight courier.<sup>4</sup>

On behalf of the Committee, Judge Rosenberg requested that I research the methods the states permit for service of a subpoena in a civil case. In particular, there is interest in how many states' rules more-or-less imitate the federal rule and to what extent states have identified alternative methods of service.<sup>5</sup> To that end, I have surveyed the statutes, court rules, and case law of the 50 states and the District of Columbia governing how to serve subpoenas in civil cases.

This memorandum summarizes my findings. Part I documents which states use language similar to that in Rule 45(b)(1) and how those states interpret that language. Part II documents which states permit methods of service beyond personal delivery (whether based on language similar to Rule 45(b)(1) or not). I also attach an appendix consisting of pertinent statutes and rules from my survey.

Part I

A. 24 States Use “Delivering” Without Qualification to Refer Exclusively to Personal Service

This and the next two categories contain states that incorporate language similar to that in Federal Rule 45(b)(1)—“delivering a copy to the named person”—into their subpoena-service rules, either expressly or by reference to service-of-process rules. This first category consists of those states that interpret that language to mean personal service only. (The states may permit other methods of service through other language, though.)

1. Alabama<sup>6</sup>
2. Alaska<sup>7</sup>
3. Arizona<sup>8</sup>
4. Arkansas<sup>9</sup>

---

<sup>6</sup> ALA. R. CIV. P. 45(b)(1) (“Service of a subpoena upon a person named therein shall be made by delivering a copy thereof to such person . . .”). A court has held that service must be made personally under this provision. Bus. Realty Inv. Co. v. City of Birmingham, 739 So. 2d 523, 526–27 (Ala. Civ. App. 1999).

<sup>7</sup> ALASKA DIST. CT. R. CIV. P. 45(c) (“Service of a subpoena upon a person named therein shall be made by delivering a copy thereof to such person . . .”). Although I found no court decisions interpreting this provision, there is an administrative decision doing so. Atlas, AWCB Case No. 201617084, 2021 WL 5549020, at *17–18 (Alaska Workers’ Comp. App. Comm’n Nov. 19, 2021) (personal service required).

<sup>8</sup> ARIZ. R. CIV. P. 45(d)(1) (“Serving a subpoena requires delivering a copy to the named person . . .”). A court has held that this provision does not authorize serving a subpoena on a person’s attorney. S & R Props. v. Maricopa Cnty., 875 P.2d 150, 162 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1993).

There is a case that mistakenly identifies the notice requirements for parties in Arkansas Rule 5 as the mode of service of a subpoena on nonparties. See Blakes v. Ark. Dep’t of Hum. Servs., 374 S.W.3d 898, 906–07 (Ark. Ct. App. 2010). Because the persons subpoenaed were not parties to the case, even if Rule 5 does apply to subpoenas served on parties in Arkansas, it should not have applied in Blakes.

Even so, Blakes does confirm that “delivery of a copy means handing the same to the attorney or to the party,” albeit in the context of Rule 5. Id. at 907. This is evidence that “delivering” would be construed similarly in Rule 45(c).

<sup>10</sup> COLO. R. CIV. P. 45(b)(2) (“Serving a subpoena requires delivering a copy to the named person . . . .”); 345(c) (“Service of a subpoena upon a person named therein shall be made by delivering a copy thereof to such person . . . .”); 510(b) (incorporating Rule 345 by reference).

The primary case interpreting Rule 45(b)(2) reads it to provide for only personal service. See Stubblefield v. Dist. Ct. in & for 18th Jud. Dist., 603 P.2d 559, 572 (Colo. 1979) (en banc). A later case permitted use of the service-of-process rules from Rule 4 in the context of business entities. See Isis Litig., L.L.C. v. Svensk Filmindustri, 170 P.3d 742, 747 (Colo. Ct. App. 2007). One district-court case has read Stubblefield and Isis to find that Rule 4’s service methods extend to subpoenas of individuals—despite Stubblefield’s clear statement that Rule 45 requires personal service and Isis’s confinement to business entities. Lynne v. Coldiron, No. 2021 CV 148, 2021 WL 7161555, at *3–4 (Colo. Dist. Ct. 2021). But Lynne does not appear to take the majority view. See Fogel v. Bankoff, 484 P.3d 788, 792 (Colo. Ct. App. 2021) (noting in passing that “C.R.C.P. 45(b)(2) . . . explains how the physical subpoena must be provided to the witness” (emphasis added)); KB Oreo, LLC v. Winnerman, Civil Action No. 20-mc-0073, 2020 WL 13412947, at *2 (D. Colo. Nov. 5, 2020) (“The Court agrees that service by certified mail did not strictly comply with the requirements of Rule 45.”).

<sup>11</sup> FLA. STAT. § 48.031(1)(a) (“Service of original process is made by delivering a copy of it to the person to be served with a copy of the complaint, petition, or other initial pleading or paper . . . .”). Personal service is required. See Aero Costa Rica, Inc. v. Dispatch Servs., Inc., 710 So. 2d 218, 219 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1998); Olin Corp. v. Haney, 245 So. 2d 669, 670 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1971).

<sup>13</sup> KAN. STAT. ANN. § 60-303(d)(1)(A) (“Personal service is effected by delivering or offering to deliver a copy of the process and petition or other document to the person to be served.”). The use of “personal service” in the same sentence as “delivering or offering to deliver” has led courts to interpret the provision as requiring “physically handing documents to a person.” In re A.P., 506 P.3d 988, 991 (Kan. Ct. App. 2022); Baker v. Hayden, No. 120,334, 2020 WL 1313814, at *3 (Kan. Ct. App. Mar. 20, 2020).

<sup>14</sup> KY. R. CIV. P. 45.03(1) (“Service of the subpoena shall be made by delivering or offering to deliver a copy thereof to the person to whom it is directed.”); KY. R. CIV. P. 4.04(2) (“by delivering a copy . . . to an agent authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process for such individual”). Case law suggests that “delivering” requires personal service. See Bishop v. Commonwealth, No. 2017-CA-001793-MR, 2019 WL 103924, at *7 (Ky. Ct. App. Jan. 4, 2019); *Martin v. (holding that a “paper is delivered to a person when placed within his reach and he accepts it”).

<sup>15</sup> LA. CODE CIV. PROC. ANN. art. 1232 (“Personal service is made when a proper officer tenders the citation or other process to the person to be served.”). The word “tenders” means in-person delivery. See Cordova v. LSU Agric. & Mech. Coll. Bd. of Supervisors, Case No. 6:19-CV-1027, 2019 WL 5493355, at *3 (W.D. La. Oct. 24, 2019); *Roper v. <sup>16</sup> MD. R. 2-422.1(e) (“A subpoena shall be served by delivering a copy to the person named . . . .”); 2-510(d) (same); 2-510.1(f) (same); 3-510(d) (same). These provisions require personal service. B.O. v. S.O., 259 A.3d 228, 246 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 2021); see also Off. of Md. Att’y Gen., 82 Op. Att’y Gen. 154, Opinion Letter on Sheriffs – Courts and Judges – Jurisdiction and Procedure – Service of Process in Gated Communities (Aug. 21, 1997), 1997 WL 566390, at *3 (discussing the requirement of personal service or service on a designated agent before Rule 2-150 authorized service by certified mail).

<sup>17</sup> MASS. GEN. LAWS ch. 223, § 2 (“Such summons may be served in any county by an officer qualified to serve civil process or by a disinterested person by . . . giving [the witness] a copy thereof . . . .”); MASS. R. CIV. P. 45(c) (“Service of a subpoena upon a person named therein shall be made by delivering a copy thereof to such person . . . .”).

In an appendix to an opinion in a case involving tax-lien foreclosure, the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court stated that chapter 223, section 2 requires personal service. Tallage Lincoln, LLC v. Williams, 151 N.E.3d 344, 359 (Mass. 2020). Because serving notice of a tax taking was not at issue in Tallage Lincoln, this is not binding precedent. But the statement is a rare data point about the subpoena-service rules in a state where multiple secondary sources say that there is no case law interpreting what “giving” or “delivering a copy” of a subpoena means.

<sup>18</sup> MINN. R. CIV. P. 45.02(a) (“Service of a subpoena upon a person named therein shall be made by delivering a copy thereof to such person . . . .”). A case from the state tax court read this provision to require personal service. Chambers Self-Storage Oakdale, LLC v. Cnty. of Washington, File Nos: 82-CV-17-1685, 82-CV-18-2123, 2021 WL 2546199, at *5 (Minn. T.C. Regular Div. June 17, 2021), aff’d, 971 N.W.2d 64 (Minn. 2022). Although the state supreme court did not clearly affirm the tax court’s interpretation of Rule 45.02(a), it did seem to accept it, stating: “Here, Chambers failed to take basic steps to locate the County Assessor and effectuate service.” Chambers, 971 N.W.2d at 74 (emphasis added). The implication is that the process server would have needed to either personally serve the county assessor or else leave the subpoena with someone at the assessor’s home.

15. Nevada<sup>20</sup>
16. New Jersey<sup>21</sup>
17. New York<sup>22</sup>

to be summoned . . .”). This provision has been interpreted as requiring personal service. See Noell v. Bender, 295 S.W. 532, 533 (Mo. 1927) (en banc); State v. Rose, 535 S.W.2d 115, 118–19 (Mo. Ct. App. 1976).

A second, rule-based provision deals with subpoenas more generally. MO. SUP. CT. R. 57.09(d)(2) (“Service of a subpoena upon a person named therein shall be made by delivering a copy thereof to such person . . .”). A state court looked to a federal-court interpretation of Federal Rule 45(b)(1) to hold that “delivering” in Rule 57.09(d)(2) does not include transmitting by facsimile. Mehrer v. Diagnostic Imaging Ctr., P.C., 157 S.W.3d 315, 321 (Mo. Ct. App. 2005) (citing Firefighters’ Inst. for Racial Equality v. City of St. Louis, 220 F.3d 898 (8th Cir. 2000) (holding that “delivering” in Federal Rule 45(b)(1) does not include sending by fax or ordinary mail))).

<sup>20</sup> NEV. R. CIV. P. 4.2(a)(3) (“delivering a copy of the summons and complaint to an agent authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process”); 4.2(d)(2) (“delivering a copy of the summons and complaint” to both the state attorney general or the public officer or employee being subpoenaed—or to agents they have designated to receive process); 4.2(d)(4) (“delivering a copy of the summons and complaint to the current or former public officer or employee, or an agent designated by him or her to receive service of process”).

Courts have read “delivering” in these provisions to require personal service. Dep’t of Corr. v. DeRosa, 466 P.3d 1253, 1254 (Nev. 2020) (“NRCP 4.2(a) requires personal service of a complaint or other document that initiates a civil action . . .”); Bristow v. Sanchez, Case No. 2:22-cv-01092, 2022 WL 16575649, at *1–2 (D. Nev. Nov. 1, 2022) (in case involving Rule 4.2(d)(4), stating that Nevada requires “hand-delivery” service); Whitfield v. Nev. State Personnel, Case No. 3:20-cv-00637, 2022 WL 171138, at *5 (D. Nev. Jan. 18, 2022) (Rule 4.2(d)(2) requires personal service).

The new version of Nevada Justice Court Rules, effective July 11, 2023, will incorporate substantively identical rules. See In re Amend. of Nev. Just. Ct. Rules of Civ. Proc., ADKT 0607 (Nev. May 12, 2023), NV ORDER 23-0014 (Westlaw). (The current operative provision reads, “Service of a subpoena upon a person named therein shall be made by delivering a copy thereof to such person . . .” NEV. JUSTICE CT. R. CIV. P. 45(b)(1). I did not find any cases interpreting it, but it will be obsolete soon anyway.)

<sup>21</sup> N.J. CT. R. 1:9-3. Although the rule begins, “Service of a subpoena shall be made by delivering a copy thereof to the person named,” it concludes by noting that a subpoena for production only may be served by mail and is enforceable “only upon receipt of a signed acknowledgment and waiver of personal service.” Id. (emphasis added). In context, “delivering a copy” most reasonably means personal delivery. Accord State v. Perkins, 529 A.2d 1056, 1058 (N.J. Super. Ct. 1987).

STAT. § 8-59 (“In obtaining the testimony of witnesses in causes pending in the trial divisions of the General Court of Justice, subpoenas shall be issued and served in the manner provided in Rule 45 of the Rules of Civil Procedure for civil actions.”); N.C. R. CIV. P. 45(b)(1) (“Service of a subpoena upon a person named therein shall be made by delivering a copy thereof to that person . . .”). Case law indicates that personal service is required under Rule 45(b)(1). See Blackburn v. Carbone, 703 S.E.2d 788, 795 & n.7 (N.C. Ct. App. 2010) (service ineffective when received by nurse employed in defendant’s office).

<sup>24</sup> N.D. R. CIV. P. 4(d)(2)(A)(iv) (“delivering a copy of the summons to the individual’s agent authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process”). Rule 4(d)(2) has been interpreted to require personal service. Hughes v. Olheiser Masonry, Inc., 935 N.W.2d 530, 532–33 (N.D. 2019) (“delivery” requires defendant to take possession of process); *Sanderson v. CIV. P. 4(d)(5) (“by delivering a copy of the summons and complaint to such officer or agency and by sending a copy of the summons and complaint by registered or certified mail to the Attorney General”). The word “delivering” in Civil Rule 4(d)(5) means personal service. Bostic v. Gegg Middle Sch., No. 2018-CP-18-01615, 2019 WL 7041433, at *2 (S.C. Ct. C.P.); *Mazyck v. Charleston Cnty. Sch. A nonparty must be served personally; substituted service is not effective. In re Berry, 578 S.W.3d 173, 178–81 (Tex. Ct. App. 2019).

<sup>27</sup> VT. R. CIV. P. 45(b)(1) (“Service of a subpoena upon a person named therein shall be made by delivering a copy thereof to such person . . .”).

A state trial court has quoted approvingly a Fifth Circuit case holding that a subpoena must be served personally and witness fees tendered simultaneously under Federal Rule 45(b)(1). Labrecque v. Royce, No. 2651209, 2013 WL 2896296, at *1 (Vt. Super. Ct. Feb. 13, 2013) (citing In re Dennis, 330 F.3d 696, 704 (5th Cir. 2003)). The trial court applied that reading of the federal rule to Vermont Rule 45(b) because “[t]he Reporter’s Notes to Vt. R. Civ. P. 45 indicate that it is modeled on and is ‘basically similar’ to Fed. R. Civ. P. 45.” Id.; see also Watson v. Dimke, No. S1497-01 CnC, 2004 WL 5459774 (Vt. Super. Ct. Apr. 5, 2004) (reading Rule 45(b)(1) similarly).

But see WASH. REV. CODE § 12.16.020 (“delivering to him or her a copy at his or her usual place of abode” (emphasis added)). I found no cases interpreting this statutory provision.

<sup>29</sup> WIS. STAT. § 885.03 (“by giving the witness a copy thereof”). Courts read this provision to require personal service. See, e.g., In re Sanctions in State v. Tatum, Nos. 98-2702, 98-3142, 2000 WL 622970, at *3–5 (Wis. Ct. App. May 16, 2000); Hutchinson v. Custom Drywall, Inc., No. 97-1675, 1998 WL 557482, at *2 (Wis. Ct. App. Sept. 3, 1998); State v. Van Straten, No. 88-1174-CR, 1989 WL 26448, at *1–2 (Wis. Ct. App. Jan. 25, 1989).

B. 5 States Use an Unqualified “Delivering” More Expansively Than Meaning Only Personal Service in at Least Some Circumstances

These states interpret “delivering a copy” to be broader than just personal service. It may be that a state confines that interpretation only to certain situations (for example, serving a party a subpoena). These states may also permit other methods of service through other language in their rules.

1. Indiana<sup>30</sup>
2. Montana<sup>31</sup>
3. New Mexico<sup>32</sup>

<sup>30</sup> IND. TRIAL R. 45(C). Although the rule begins, “Service of a subpoena upon a person named therein shall be made by delivering a copy thereof to such person,” it states immediately afterward, “Service may be made in the same manner as provided in Rule 4.1, Rule 4.16 and Rule 5(B).” From context, “delivering a copy” is best read as defined by the methods of service listed in Rules 4.1, 4.16, and 5(B). Accord Perkins v. Mem’l Hosp. of S. Bend, 141 N.E.3d 1231, 1237 n.1 (Ind. 2020); Collins v. State, 14 N.E.3d 80, 84 (Ind. Ct. App. 2014); Shoultz v. State, 995 N.E.2d 647, 658 (Ind. Ct. App. 2013).

One case interprets nearly identical language in a statute governing subpoena service in criminal cases. The result implies that the person originally charged with delivering the subpoena need not personally deliver it—it suffices that whoever ultimately gives the subpoena to the named person satisfies the criteria to be a valid server. See State ex rel. Anderson v. Dist. Ct. of 8th Jud. Dist., 610 P.2d 1183, 1185 (Mont. 1980).

There is also a trial-court case finding that a subpoena duces tecum was properly served on a nonparty by certified mail under Rule 5. Hawkins v. Randall, No. DV061020, 2011 WL 11532454, at *4–5 (Mont. Dist. Ct. Feb. 8, 2011). But Rule 5 says nothing about nonparty service—it governs service on parties. The court appears to have conflated the methods of service under this rule, which are proper when used to notify parties that a subpoena duces tecum is being issued, with the methods of service on subjects of subpoenas duces tecum, which are not expressly defined. (There is an argument that Rule 5 may be used to serve a subpoena duces tecum on a party, but that was not the case in Hawkins.)

<sup>32</sup> N.M. DIST. CT. R. CIV. P. 1-045(B)(2) (“Service of a subpoena on a person named therein shall be made by delivering a copy thereof to that person . . .”); N.M. MAGIS. CT. R. CIV. P. 2-502(B)(1) (same); N.M. METRO. CT. R. CIV. P. 3-502(B)(1) (same); N.M. MUN. CT. R. CIV. P. 8-602(C)(1) (same, substituting “to such person” for “to that person”).

A New Mexico court has held that Rule 1-045(B)(2), as applied to service on a party, incorporates Rule 1-005 into the definition of “delivering.” Khalsa v. Puri, 525 P.3d 394, 398–401 (N.M. Ct. App. 2022). I have not found case law interpreting “delivering” in the other rules, but they are likely susceptible to a similar interpretation because they have counterparts to Rule 1-005. See N.M. MAGIS. CT. R. CIV. P. 2-203; N.M. METRO. CT. R. CIV. P. 3-203; N.M. MUN. CT. R. CIV. P. 8-208.

<sup>33</sup> R.I. GEN. LAWS § 9-17-4 (“A subpoena to a witness shall be served by delivering a copy to him or her.”); R.I. SUPER. CT. R. CIV. P. 45(b)(1) (“Service of a subpoena upon a person named therein shall be made by delivering a copy thereof to such person . . . .”); R.I. DIST. CT. R. CIV. P. 45(c) (same).

The state supreme court has held that the methods of service in Superior Court Rule 5(b) and District Court Rule 5(b) may be used to serve a subpoena on a party. See Tel. Credit Union of R.I. v. Fetela, 569 A.2d 1059, 1061–62 (R.I. 1990) (holding that a subpoena duces tecum is “lawful process” and that service on a party out-of-state insurance company’s appointed attorney under state law—the insurance commissioner—was effective under Rules 45 and 5).

<sup>34</sup> One use of an unqualified “delivering” has been interpreted as meaning personal service only. TENN. R. CIV. P. 4.04(5) (“by delivering a copy of the summons and of the complaint to the person in charge of the office or agency”). Rule 4.04(5) requires personal service on the person in charge. Allgood v. Gateway Health Sys., 309 S.W.3d 918, 921 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2009).

There are also other instances of an unqualified “delivering.” TENN. CODE ANN. § 16-15-708(a) (“The subpoena . . . may be served . . . by delivering or offering to deliver a copy of the subpoena to the person to whom it is directed.”); TENN. R. CIV. P. 45.03 (“Service of the subpoena shall be made by delivering or offering to deliver a copy thereof to the person to whom it is directed.”).

But see TENN. R. CIV. P. 45.09 (“For purposes of issuance of any subpoena under Rule 45, the clerk of the court in which the action is pending may issue the subpoena in either written paper or electronic form. . . .”). I did not find any cases expressly saying so, but it seems that, at least since the adoption of Rule 45.09 in 2022, “delivering” in Rule 45.03 must include electronic delivery—how else would an electronic subpoena be served?

An advisory commission comment states that Rule 45.03 “requires personal service upon a witness, unlike the prior practice, authorized by Tenn. Code Ann. § 24-206 [repealed], of leaving a copy of a subpoena at the usual place of residence of a witness who could not be found.” TENN. R. CIV. P. 45.03 advisory commission comment (alteration in original). The comment’s continuing accuracy is in doubt following the adoption of Rule 45.09.

C. 11 Other States Use an Unqualified “Delivering,” But There Was Insufficient Data to Determine Its Meaning in Those States

These states use language similar to “delivering a copy,” but it was not clear from my survey how they interpret that language. This could be because I found no case law with reasonably clear holdings or dicta, or it could be because the evidence I found was weak or mixed.

1. California<sup>35</sup>
2. Delaware<sup>36</sup>
3. District of Columbia<sup>37</sup>
4. Hawai‘i<sup>38</sup>

<sup>35</sup> The general subpoena-service provision qualifies “delivering” with “personally.” CAL. CIV. PROC. CODE § 1987(a) (“by delivering a copy . . . to the witness personally”). But see CAL. GOV’T CODE §§ 68097.1(a) (“by delivering two copies to [a state employee’s] immediate superior at the public entity by which he or she is employed or an agent designated by that immediate superior to receive that service”); 68097.1(b) (“by delivering two copies to [a state employee’s] immediate superior or agent designated by that immediate superior to receive that service”); 68097.3 (“by delivering a copy . . . to [a Highway Patrol member’s] immediate superior or . . . to the person in charge of the office . . . where the member filed [the relevant] report”).

One case remarked in dictum that “delivery” on an immediate superior need not be personal. Lopez v. Shiomoto, No. D076081, 2021 WL 21444, at *10 (Cal. Ct. App. Jan. 4, 2021) (mail delivery on immediate superior permissible). Otherwise, I did not find any cases discussing this provision.

<sup>36</sup> DEL. SUPER. CT. R. CIV. P. 45(b)(1) (“Service of a subpoena upon a person named therein shall be made by delivering a copy thereof to such person.”); DEL. CH. CT. R. 45(b) (same); DEL. CT. C.P. CIV. R. 45(c) (same with very minor wording changes). I found no cases interpreting these provisions.

<sup>37</sup> D.C. SUPER. CT. CIV. R. 45(b)(1) (“Serving a subpoena requires delivering a copy to the named person . . .”). I found no cases interpreting this provision.

<sup>38</sup> HAW. R. CIV. P. 45(c) (“Service of a subpoena upon a person named therein shall be made by delivering a copy thereof to such person . . .”). I found no cases interpreting this provision.

A practical-law resource states that “[i]n Hawaii, subpoenas can generally be served in the same manner as a summons.” JASMINE M. FISHER, PRACTICAL LAW STATE Q&A, Drafting and Issuing Discovery Subpoenas: Hawaii § 9 (2022), W-005-5976 (Westlaw) (citing HAW. R. CIV. P. 4(c); 45(c)). Rule 4(c) states:

- (c) Same: By Whom Served. Service of all process shall be made:
- (1) anywhere in the State by the sheriff or the sheriff’s deputy, by some other person specially appointed by the court for that purpose, or by any person who is not a party and is not less than 18 years of age; or (2) in any county by the chief of police or the chief's duly authorized subordinate. A subpoena, however, may be served as provided in Rule 45.

The practical-law resource's claim appears to rely on the sentence: "A subpoena, however, may be served as provided in Rule 45." As written, this sentence does not support that claim. If the language is confined only to who may serve a subpoena, it is surplusage—anyone permitted to serve a subpoena under Rule 45(c) is already authorized under the rest of Rule 4(c) to serve process. Even if the "as provided in Rule 45" language is intended to apply more broadly to the manner of serving a subpoena, it is still surplusage. Rule 4(d) provides for serving process on many kinds of defendants in a variety of ways beyond "delivering."

A staff note dating back to the rule's adoption explains that "delivering" has been interpreted as "delivering a copy of the subpoena to the person being served." OHIO R. CIV. P. 45(C), staff note to 1970 adoption (emphasis added). That same note also reads the corresponding federal rule to "provide[] for personal service only." Id.

Although one case did hold that an attorney's attempted service of a subpoena by certified mail was ineffective, GZK, Inc. v. Schumaker Ltd. P'ship, 858 N.E.2d 867, 871–72 (Ohio Ct. App. 2006), the reason does not jibe with an interpretation that "delivering" means personal service only. The court emphasized that the reason the service was defective was that the mail carrier delivering the subpoena was not necessarily one of the authorized process servers under Rule 45(B): "a sheriff, bailiff, coroner, clerk of court, constable, or a deputy of any, . . . an attorney at law, or . . . any other person designated by order of court who is not a party and is not less than eighteen years of age." Indeed, the court acknowledged that delivery by certified mail was not prohibited per se, but rather that "[t]here has been no suggestion in this case that the mail carrier who delivered GZK's subpoena fit within any of the foregoing categories." Id. n.3.

<sup>42</sup> OKLA. STAT. tit. 12, § 2004.1(B)(1) ("Service of a subpoena upon a person named therein shall be made by delivering . . . a copy thereof to such person . . ."). It is uncertain whether this statute requires personal service on parties. Compare Waddle v. Waddle, 868 P.2d 751, 752–53 (Okla. Civ. App. 1994) (personal service required on a party; party's attorney is insufficient), with State ex rel. Mashburn v. $18,007.00 in U.S. Currency, 290 P.3d 771, 775

n.2 (Okla. Civ. App. 2012) (service of a subpoena duces tecum is made on a party through the party’s attorney).

<sup>43</sup> In general, Oregon expressly requires personal delivery. OR. R. CIV. P. 55(B)(2)(a) (unless an exception applies, “the subpoena must be personally delivered to the witness”); 9(B) (expressly defining “delivery of a copy” for purposes of Rule 9).

But see OR. REV. STAT. § 44.552(1) (requiring either personal delivery to the officer or employer or else “delivering a copy” to the officer’s or employee’s immediate superior). I found no cases interpreting this provision.

<sup>44</sup> UTAH R. CIV. P. 4(d)(1)(A) (“by delivering them to an agent authorized by appointment or by law to receive process”). I did not find any cases addressing whether “delivering” to an agent requires personal service on the agent. One court thought it an “interesting question” but did not resolve the issue because it had been waived. Martinez v. Dale, 476 P.3d 136, 141 n.7 (Utah Ct. App. 2020).

<sup>45</sup> WYO. R. CIV. P. 45(b)(1) (“Service of a subpoena upon a person named therein shall be made by delivering a copy thereof to such person . . .”). I found no cases interpreting this provision.

D. 11 States Do Not Use an Unqualified “Delivering” in Their Subpoena-Service Rules

These states either do not use language essentially the same as “delivering a copy” or else qualify that language with a term like “personally” to make unambiguous what is meant.

1. Connecticut<sup>46</sup>
2. Georgia<sup>47</sup>
3. Illinois<sup>48</sup>
4. Michigan<sup>49</sup>
5. Mississippi<sup>50</sup>
6. Nebraska<sup>51</sup>

<sup>47</sup> GA. CODE ANN. § 24-13-24 (“A subpoena may be served by any sheriff, by his or her deputy, or by any other person not less than 18 years of age. . . . Subpoenas may also be served by registered or certified mail or statutory overnight delivery . . . . Service upon a party may be made by serving his or her counsel of record.”). Case law indicates that nonparties may be served only by personal service if not served by registered or certified mail or statutory overnight delivery. See Mijajlovic v. State, 347 S.E.2d 325, 326 (Ga. Ct. App. 1986); Edenfield v. State, 249 S.E.2d 316, 317 (Ga. Ct. App. 1978). (Note that these two cases dealt with previous versions of the statute.)

<sup>51</sup> NEB. CT. R. DISC. § 6-334(A)(a)(4) (“A subpoena pursuant to this rule shall be served either personally . . . .”); NEB. REV. STAT. § 25-1226(1) (“by leaving the subpoena with the person to be served”).

7. New Hampshire<sup>52</sup>
8. Pennsylvania<sup>53</sup>
9. South Dakota<sup>54</sup>
10. Virginia<sup>55</sup>
11. West Virginia<sup>56</sup>

---

Two provisions do use “delivery” without the “in person” qualification. Id. §§ 8.01-296(2)(a) (“If the [person] to be served is not found at [the person’s] usual place of abode, by delivering a copy . . . and giving information of its purport” to a family member at least 16 years old who resides there); 8.01-298(1) (“At [the witness’s] usual place of business or employment during business hours, by delivering a copy thereof and giving information of its purport to the person found there in charge”). But other context in the statutes makes clear that the subpoena is being delivered personally to someone. The first provision implies that the process-server is physically at the subpoenaed person’s residence, giving information about the subpoena to the family member in residence. And the second provision implies that the process-server is physically at the subpoenaed person’s place of business during business hours, again giving information about the subpoena to someone in charge. I therefore do not count this as an unqualified use of the word “delivering.”

<sup>56</sup> W. VA. R. CIV. P. 45(b)(1) (“Service of a subpoena upon a person named therein shall be made in the same manner provided for service of process under Rule 4(d)(1)(A) . . . .”; 4(d)(1)(A) (“Delivering a copy of the summons and complaint to the individual personally”).

B. 28 States Permit Substituted Service in at Least Some Circumstances

This category intends to capture those states allowing service by leaving a copy of the subpoena with someone other than the person named. If substituted service may be made only on a restricted group of persons, that group is listed next to the state on the list below. Note that the survey excluded provisions for service on persons in the custody of another (e.g., minors, conservatees, inmates, etc.).

1. Alabama<sup>70</sup>
2. California—a state employee or Highway Patrol member<sup>71</sup>
3. Connecticut—a police officer, correctional officer, or physician<sup>72</sup>
4. Florida—any person<sup>73</sup>; potentially for a person with a certain kind of mailing address<sup>74</sup>

<sup>70</sup> ALA. R. CIV. P. 45(b)(1) (“leaving a copy at the person’s dwelling house or usual place of abode with some person of suitable age and discretion then residing therein”). But see infra note 117.

<sup>71</sup> CAL. GOV’T CODE §§ 68097.1(a)–(b) (may serve employee’s immediate superior or agent designated by the superior); 68097.3 (may serve Highway Patrol member’s immediate superior or person in charge of the relevant Highway Patrol office).

<sup>72</sup> CONN. GEN. STAT. §§ 52-143(b) (may serve police officer through chief of police or designee); 52-143(c) (may serve correctional officer through Commissioner of Correction’s designee); 52-143(f) (may serve physician through office manager or person in charge at physician’s office or principal place of business).

<sup>73</sup> FLA. STAT. § 48.031(1)(a) (“leaving [it] at his or her usual place of abode with any person residing therein who is 15 years of age or older and informing the person of [its] contents”).

<sup>74</sup> Id. § 48.031(6) (“If the only address for a person to be served which is discoverable through public records is a private mailbox, a virtual office, or an executive office or mini suite, substituted service may be made by leaving a copy . . . with the person in charge” there.).

It is not clear that subsection (6) applies to subpoena service. Subsection (3) says that subpoena service in a civil case must be done under subsection (1), but subsection (6) usually applies in serving process under subsection (1). So it is not clear from the face of the statute whether subsection (3)’s mandatory reference to subsection (1) for serving subpoenas incorporates the exception from subsection (6).

A federal magistrate judge has opined, albeit in dictum, that subsection (6) does apply to subpoena service. Anthony v. FDE Mktg. Grp. LLC, Case No. 21-23345-MC, 2021 WL 5937683, at *3–4 (S.D. Fla. Dec. 16, 2021).

This statute conflicts with Rule 45(b)(1) on several points. For example, who may serve the subpoena (a sheriff under the statute; a broader range of servers under the rule) and how it may be served (certified mail not permitted under the statute; under the rule, if leaving copy at witness’s residence, must be left with person of suitable age and discretion).

The rule probably supersedes the statute. The state constitution provides that “[t]he supreme court shall make and promulgate rules governing the administration of all courts and rules governing practice and procedure in all courts.” ALA. CONST. art. VI, § 150 (2022). Although “[t]hese rules may be changed by a general act of statewide application,” id., section 12-21-180 was last amended in 1980, while Rule 45(b)(1) was last amended in 2016.

There is also CPLR 313 (“A person domiciled in the state or subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of the state under section 301 or 302, or his executor or administrator, may be served with the summons without the state, in the same manner as service is made within the state . . .”), which could be reasonably construed to imply that “subpoena service without the state should also be available in certain instances. This is because “Judiciary Law section 2-b, added as part of the 1962 package of CPLR legislation, speaks of a subpoena ‘requiring the attendance of a person found in the state.’ That language, despite ample Advisory Committee indication to the contrary, has been cited to preclude extrastate service of a subpoena regardless of the soundness of the basis that may exist for it.” Id.

Even so, the statute likely supersedes Civil Rule 45 for Courts of Limited Jurisdiction in district-court cases. The statute was last amended effective June 10, 2010, which is later than the most recent amendment of Civil Rule 45 for Courts of Limited Jurisdiction, on Sept. 1, 2009.

These states express in their subpoena-service rules or statutes (or rules or statutes incorporated by reference) that refusal of service is an effective. It is possible that other states have incorporated similar provisions through case law; my survey did not attempt to catalog those states.

The text of the subpoena-service rules in the following states could allow for constructive service in some situations. I have not confirmed through case law that these states in fact do allow constructive subpoena service (and at least in New York, it seems unlikely that a court would allow it). It is also possible that other states have incorporated similar provisions through case law; my survey did not attempt to catalog those states.

SHOULD THE FEDERAL RULES OF CIVIL PROCEDURE BE AMENDED TO ADDRESS CROSS-BORDER DISCOVERY?

BY MICHAEL M. BAYLSON<sup>1</sup> AND STEVEN S. GENSLER

In today's world of borderless commerce, digital documents, and cloud storage, information relevant to U.S. litigation frequently is located outside of the United States. When discovery in a U.S. case crosses the border to reach that non-U.S. information, the lawyers and judges face a complex web of issues. Can a party use the federal court discovery scheme to get the information? Maybe. Must the party seek the information through the government of the foreign country where it is located? Maybe. Will that process be governed by a treaty like the Hague Evidence Convention<sup>2</sup> (HEC)? Maybe. If the HEC or another treaty exists, will it ultimately yield the information sought? Maybe. And when a party seeks discovery through a foreign country's process, what role does the federal judge play, to what extent are the federal rules discovery mechanisms involved, and do any of the duties and certifications associated with the discovery rules apply?

One might expect the civil rules to establish a procedural framework for judges and attorneys to follow when confronted with the daunting prospect of seeking cross-border discovery. But they largely don't — with the most glaring void being the lack of any framework for seeking documents and electronically stored information (ESI) located overseas.<sup>3</sup>

We propose that the Advisory Committee on Civil Rules examine how the civil rules might be amended to better guide judges and attorneys through the cross-border discovery maze.<sup>4</sup> One of the greatest features of the rule-making process is its ability to brainstorm ideas and then evaluate them in a public and iterative process, with the best ideas emerging at the end. We have every faith that the rule-making process, if deployed, will answer the question posed by the title of this article and reveal whether and how the civil rules should be amended to address cross-border discovery. We think that, at a minimum, that inquiry will demonstrate the need for cross-border discovery to be added to the rules that govern the discovery-planning process. We believe it will show that even more could, and should, be done in this crucial area. But the question for today is whether rule-makers should initiate a cross-border discovery project to explore what that might look like.<sup>5</sup> We think the answer is a resounding “yes.”

SURGING CROSS-BORDER DISCOVERY

Information is everywhere. And in litigation, it is increasingly located outside the U.S., continuing a trend noted by the Supreme Court more than 35 years ago.<sup>6</sup> This trend has accelerated since then with an even more globalized economy, the development of the internet, and advances in communications technology. To get a window into how much cross-border discovery has increased since the turn of the 21st century, we searched the LexisNexis and Westlaw databases for terms associated with international or cross-border ►

CASES MENTIONING INTERNATIONAL OR CROSS-BORDER DISCOVERY

discovery. As the timeline graph above shows, case references to those terms have risen significantly and steadily during over the last 20-plus years.<sup>7</sup>

This exponential growth is likely to persist as international trade continues to expand. There is no reason to think that foreign companies will stop expanding their operations worldwide, including into the United States, while keeping their corporate headquarters — and the bulk of their records — overseas. Nor is there any reason to think that domestic companies will discontinue their own overseas activities — both with directly managed operations and with operational relationships with foreign entities — generating large amounts of records kept overseas as well.

SETTING THE SCENE

Our thesis is that the civil rules could do more — possibly much more — to provide guidance to lawyers and judges dealing with cross-border discovery. Before exploring what that might entail, however, we need to explain what we mean by cross-border discovery and what that process currently looks like.

Cross-border discovery is the gathering of evidence from sources located outside the U.S. One important type involves getting help from the foreign country where the information is located. This often involves a process created by a treaty defining how requests may be made and prescribing the foreign country’s duty to respond. The best-known and most important treaty is the Hague Evidence Convention (which we will discuss in greater detail later). In the absence of a treaty, requests for help can be made through diplomatic channels, but whether and how to respond will be entirely up to the foreign country.

Most cross-border discovery probably occurs without asking the foreign country for its help. That’s because when the source is a party to the lawsuit subject to U.S. jurisdiction, the U.S. court can compel that party to produce information regardless of the information's location. For example, imagine that a foreign company is a defendant in a case in federal court. Assuming the company is subject to the court's jurisdiction, the court can order the company to gather records located at its foreign headquarters and produce them in the U.S. Similarly, the U.S. court can order the company to produce its business officers to be deposed — at a location that could be abroad or in the U.S. — even if those officers work at the company's foreign headquarters.

What determines which cross-border discovery pathway will be used? The most important variable is whether the foreign source is subject to the U.S. court's jurisdiction. If it isn't, the court will have no power to enforce a discovery request. So unless the source produces the evidence voluntarily, help from the foreign country will be needed to compel compliance. Things get trickier when the foreign source is subject to the U.S. court's jurisdiction. Now, both pathways are on the table. Nothing prevents the parties or the court from reaching out to the foreign country for help. But the party seeking the information is likely to want the U.S. court to “go it alone” and compel production through U.S. discovery rules.

In its landmark 1987 Aerospatiale decision, the U.S. Supreme Court answered what is arguably the thorniest “pathway” question by finding that the HEC is neither mandatory nor exclusive.<sup>8</sup> The issue in Aerospatiale was whether cross-border discovery must go through the HEC process when the information being sought is located in a country that is also a party to the HEC. The Court said no, holding that

The fact that the U.S. court has authorized the discovery — and may be willing to compel compliance — doesn't stop the foreign country from regulating in-country activities or from penalizing actors who violate local law. This might leave a party caught between the rock of being sanctioned by the U.S. court if they don't comply and the hard place of being sanctioned by the foreign country if they do.

the HEC creates an optional pathway that need not be used if another way of getting evidence is available. The Court also held that parties have no obligation to try the HEC process first before seeking the information through “regular” civil discovery. However, the trial court has ultimate authority to choose which pathway to take, and thus can require parties to go through the HEC process when the court concludes it is the better pathway.

There is another layer to this big-picture overview. When the U.S. court allows the parties to conduct “regular” discovery to obtain information from foreign sources, is that foreign country cut out of the picture? Not at all. It means only that the U.S. court isn't asking the foreign country for help. It doesn't stop the foreign country from asserting its own interests. The foreign country may view the taking of evidence by private parties as an illegal act. The foreign country may have adopted a so-called blocking statute, making it illegal for the source to provide the information in question. And, increasingly, such information may be subject to data-protection laws in the foreign country. The fact that the U.S. court has authorized the discovery — and may be willing to compel compliance — doesn't stop the foreign country from regulating in-country activities or from penalizing actors who violate local law. This might leave a party caught between the rock of being sanctioned by the U.S. court if they don't comply and the hard place of being sanctioned by the foreign country if they do.

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure say very little about cross-border or foreign discovery. The discovery rules mention “foreign” discovery only twice, and both mentions are narrow and obscure.<sup>9</sup> The first reference occurs in the little-known Rule 28, “Persons Before Whom Depositions May Be Taken.” Rule 28(b) addresses the taking of depositions “[i]n a foreign country.” It lists four options: taking depositions “under an applicable treaty,” “under a letter of request,” “on notice,” or “before a person commissioned by the court.” Rule 28(b) concludes with the important evidentiary principle that evidence taken in pursuant to a letter of request “need not be excluded merely because it is not a verbatim transcript [or] because the testimony was not taken under oath.” Foreign discovery isn't mentioned again until Rule 45, and there's even less substance there. Rule 45(b) (3), “Service in a Foreign Country,” is just a cross-reference to the statute authorizing federal courts to issue and ► serve subpoenas on U.S. citizens residing in a foreign country.<sup>10</sup>

Think about what isn't addressed in the current civil rules. There's nothing about planning for cross-border discovery, or about case management. There's nothing that explicitly addresses document discovery — a much bigger part of modern cross-border discovery than depositions. And there's nothing addressing what aspects of the civil rules' discovery scheme apply when parties seek information through the HEC or other process that utilizes a foreign country's evidence-gathering force. Indeed, nothing in the civil rules even tells us whether that is considered "discovery" at all.

Before delving further into those topics, however, we need to explore more fully what the HEC does and how its evidence-gathering tools operate. We also need to discuss some structural limits and operational problems that constrain its effectiveness as a substitute for civil discovery.

THE HAGUE EVIDENCE CONVENTION

The U.S. has been a party to the HEC since 1972.<sup>11</sup> The HEC creates a process by which a court in one country can ask a second country to help secure evidence located in the second country. While such requests have always been possible through diplomatic channels, treaties allow countries to create standard mechanisms for the submission of requests and to define the duties of response. The HEC does so in a way designed to address an inherent difficulty in cross-border discovery.

The HEC is structured to bridge the gap between countries' different views about the nature of gathering evidence in litigation. We in the U.S. view the gathering of evidence as a task for attorneys, with judges regulating the process and enforcing compliance. But many countries view evidence gathering as a task for the state and consider party efforts to gather evidence as an intrusion on their sovereign authority.<sup>12</sup> To address that disconnect, the HEC creates a process by which foreign litigants can tap into the evidence-gathering methods of the country where the information is located, thereby ensuring due respect for that country's norms. The HEC also provides methods for parties to ask that evidence gathered through the foreign country's mechanisms be collected in ways so it is usable in the requesting court. As the Supreme Court put it, "[t]he Convention's purpose was to establish a system for obtaining evidence located abroad that would be 'tolerable' to the state executing the request and would produce evidence 'utilizable' in the requesting state."<sup>13</sup>

The Hague Evidence Convention allows participating countries to decide whether to go along with U.S.-style pretrial document discovery, and many continue to reject our approach entirely.

The HEC's best-known means for seeking foreign-country assistance is the letter of request (LOR).<sup>14</sup> Under this process, a party asks the U.S. judge to send a request to the foreign country's central authority, which then coordinates with an appropriate official in that country to take the requested evidence and return it to the central authority for forwarding to the U.S. The LOR method can be used to take witness testimony or to secure documents. While the foreign country presumptively follows its own practices for taking evidence, the foreign country can be asked to employ special methods and procedures to ensure that the evidence is captured in ways that ensure its usability in the requesting country.<sup>15</sup>

While the LOR process can be useful, several frustrating limitations have prevented it from reaching its full potential. Most significantly, Article 23 of the HEC permits countries to opt out of executing LORs "issued for the purpose of obtaining pretrial discovery of documents as known in the Common Law countries."<sup>16</sup> Of the 61 participating countries, 26 have made full Article 23 declarations barring execution of any LOR for pretrial discovery, while another 17 have made partial Article 23 declarations that set restrictions on the type and amount of evidence that may be sought. In short, the HEC allows participating countries to decide whether to go along with U.S.-style pretrial document discovery, and many continue to reject our approach entirely. Others reject so-called "fishing expedition" requests but will enforce narrowly tailored requests for known documents that are described with particularity and obviously relevant to the case. Second, the LOR process has developed a reputation for bureaucracy and delay. Hard data is tough to come by, but anecdotes are common about LORs being held up by a central authority or by officials designated to take the evidence. While some anecdotes may be exaggerated, what is certain is that if an LOR gets slow played in the foreign country, the requesting court (or parties) can do little under the HEC to speed things up.

A second, lesser-known method for seeking foreign-country assistance is sometimes available. Under Chapter II of the HEC, the judge handling the case can appoint a commissioner to take witness testimony or receive documents in the foreign country.<sup>17</sup> The commissioner — often a local attorney — can act as soon as the appointment is approved, frequently within just a few weeks. The process is especially helpful in France because it has been held that evidence taken by a Chapter II commissioner does not violate France’s blocking statute. For example, Judge Baylson appointed a Chapter II commissioner in Behrens v. Arconic Inc. — a case concerning the tragic 2017 fire at the Grenfell Tower in London that killed 72 people and injured hundreds more — to collect important documents possessed by the defendant’s French subsidiary and located in France.<sup>18</sup>

However, the Chapter II commissioner process comes with substantial limits. Countries can opt out of the Chapter II process entirely, and many have.<sup>19</sup> Of those participating, most require permission to use the process, and conditions can be imposed. Finally, and most importantly, Chapter II commissioners lack the power to compel cooperation from unwilling sources.<sup>20</sup> While countries can opt under the HEC to supply compulsive aid, very few do so.<sup>21</sup> So although a Chapter II commissioner may be the fastest and easiest way to get information from a willing foreign source, the LOR remains the standard HEC method for getting evidence from uncooperative sources.

AEROSPATIALE AND THE CIVIL RULES SCHEME

As discussed earlier, the Supreme Court held in Aerospatiale that the HEC is not the exclusive means of securing discovery from foreign sources. Rather, it described the HEC as creating an optional procedure that did not displace the power of U.S. courts “to order a foreign national party before it to produce evidence physically located within a signatory country.”<sup>22</sup> Taking the matter one step further, the Court declined to require U.S. litigants to resort to the HEC process before initiating discovery.<sup>23</sup> Rather, trial courts must decide in each situation whether to require resort to the HEC process or allow discovery under the civil rules, taking into account “the particular facts, sovereign interests, and likelihood that resort to [the HEC] procedures will prove effective.”<sup>24</sup> The Court went on to reference and implicitly endorse factors set out in a draft of what would become Section 442(1) of the Restatement (Third) of Foreign Relations Law of the United States:

1. The importance to the litigation of the documents or other information requested
2. The degree of specificity of the request
3. Whether the information originated in the United States
4. The availability of alternative means of securing the information
5. The extent to which noncompliance with the request would undermine important interests of the United States, or compliance with the request would undermine important interests of the state where the information is located.<sup>25</sup>

To illustrate what this means in practice, imagine a suit by a U.S. plaintiff against a German defendant with records (in its “possession, custody, or control”) located in Germany. Imagine further that the plaintiff filed a Rule 34 document request. Using its power over the German defendant as a party, the court could compel compliance and require the defendant to gather documents in Germany and produce them in the U.S. Or the court could decline to enforce the Rule 34 request and instead direct the plaintiff to seek the records through the HEC process. The court would make that decision based on its evaluation of the Aerospatiale factors, with no presumption in favor of requiring the party seeking the evidence to use the HEC. In contrast, imagine that the same plaintiff also wished to obtain documents from a second German entity that was not party to the U.S. lawsuit. The court would then lack jurisdiction to compel production through the discovery rules, forcing the plaintiff to ask the judge to initiate the HEC process.

Aerospatiale provides clear guidance in one respect — it clearly tells the parties and the judge that they can sidestep the HEC process in many cases. And while one would scarcely call the Aerospatiale analysis predictable in its outcome, it does provide a test for courts to apply.

But Aerospatiale provides only hints at how the “optional” HEC process fits within the larger framework of civil discovery. Consider case management. In Aerospatiale, the question of whether to resort to the HEC arose in the context of a motion to compel after the French defendant objected to the plaintiff’s Rule 34 request. Technically, all the trial court did was resolve a discrete discovery dispute. But the Aerospatiale analysis strongly implies a larger management role for courts. Surely the trial court can address potential Aerospatiale questions in advance as part of the discovery-management process. Indeed, the Supreme Court recognized that requiring a party to attempt HEC procedures was but a step in the larger discovery process since the trial court retains authority to order rules-based discovery if such attempts fail. In many ways, the Aerospatiale analysis anticipates today's more actively managed and iterative discovery process.

Aerospatiale is essentially silent on other questions regarding the intersection of HEC discovery and the federal rules scheme. Is it subject to the early moratorium under Rule 26(d) or the discovery deadline set in the Rule 16(b) scheduling order? Does it count toward any numerical limits on discovery? Does the Rule 26(e) duty to supplement apply? Are requests to use the HEC process subject to Rule 26(g)'s duties and certifications? What about objections and responses? Do any aspects of HEC discovery fall within the sanctions provisions of Rule 37? For example, what happens if a court learns that documents produced were fake, or that the production was materially incomplete? One might view all of these questions as variations on a larger theme: To what extent is the use of the HEC process (or other diplomatic channels) "discovery" under the rules in the first place?

We pause to emphasize two things. First, we don't fault the Supreme Court for not answering these questions; they were neither raised in nor necessary to the Court's decision. Our point is only that if one is looking to Aerospatiale to locate the HEC process within the discovery rules, it is no more helpful than those rules themselves. Second, we appreciate that federal judges can answer all of the questions we posed above. And if those answers created or identified serious regulatory gaps, those judges likely could provide sensible solutions through the exercise of their inherent authority. But that doesn't mean we shouldn't think more carefully and deeply about how HEC discovery fits into the rules-based scheme as it stands.

We think the time has come for rule-makers to systematically explore how the federal rules might address the gathering of evidence located outside the United States. We emphasize the word "systematically." While we have our own ideas about issues that should be looked into, the greater task would be to examine how cross-border discovery fits into the entire civil rules scheme. This is the type of task to which the rule-making process is especially suited.

THE TIME HAS COME

When rule-makers revised Rule 28(b) in 1963, it was part of a larger, congressionally mandated examination of the rules and statutes governing cross-border discovery.<sup>26</sup> A product of its times, it reflected an era when depositions were king and document requests still required advance court approval.<sup>27</sup> Since then, the discovery scheme has become more complicated. The advent of electronic discovery has transformed the process. And litigation increasingly plays out on a global stage that seeks to protect data privacy.

We think the time has come for rule-makers to systematically explore how the federal rules might address the gathering of evidence located outside the United States. We emphasize the word "systematically." While we have our own ideas about issues that should be looked into, the greater task would be to examine how cross-border discovery fits into the entire civil rules scheme. This is the type of task to which the rule-making process is especially suited. We have no doubt that the bench, bar, and academy can and will help rule-makers identify potential contact points and puzzle through possible solutions.

An easy starting point might be to integrate Aerospatiale and the HEC process into the discovery-management and case-management rules. Rule 26(f) requires parties to consider a broad range of discovery topics and submit a plan setting forth their views on those topics. Developing that plan forces parties to think ahead and prompts judges to consider ways to keep the process on track and prevent problems from festering. Should cross-border discovery be on that list? Should it also be on the list of items for consideration at the initial Rule 16 case-management conference?

We think the answers to these questions are obvious. Over 35 years ago, the Supreme Court remarked that "[w]hen it is necessary to seek evidence abroad... the district court must supervise pretrial proceedings particularly closely to prevent discovery abuses."<sup>28</sup> More generally, the need for advance planning is heightened in cross-border discovery because the court might require parties to at least try to use the HEC before considering next steps.<sup>29</sup> The need for early and active management is all the more important today because of the emergence of robust data-protection laws that may require the parties and the court to interact with data-protection regulators in the source country.

The civil rules might explicitly address what parties can do to obtain documents located outside the U.S. Can they be obtained through the Rule 28(b) deposition process by requiring a witness to bring them to the deposition? Although Rule 28(b) allows for depositions in a foreign country, it says nothing about securing documents from the witness or the witness's employer. Allowing depositions but not allowing documents is like an opera without a libretto — you can hear the music, but there are no words to explain the story. Rule 28(b) might be amended to require deponents to bring requested and relevant documents to depositions unless disclosure is constrained by a foreign law.

More broadly, the rules say nothing about the role of document requests when documents are located overseas. As Aerospatiale illustrates, Rule 34 has no geographic limit. A party must produce documents within its “possession, custody, or control” whether they are located next door to the courthouse or halfway around the world. But what about documents outside the party's possession, custody, or control — and how is “control” defined when disclosure or production may be constrained by the host country's law? What about documents that are within party control but the court determines the better path is to use methods set out in the HEC? Should Rule 34 include a list, similar to Rule 28(b), outlining the options? Similar questions might be asked with respect to document subpoenas under Rule 45.

Taking the analysis one step further, could there be a “master” rule comprehensively addressing cross-border discovery? Recall the many questions we posed earlier about how the HEC process intersects with the civil discovery scheme. Answers could be provided in the specific rules dealing with these topics. Or maybe an overarching rule is needed that collects those answers in a single place — or possibly even answers them in the aggregate.

A “master” rule might provide a roadmap for lawyers and judges to follow. Consider again the scenario discussed above, in which a party seeks records located in Germany. Nothing in the current rules scheme alerts litigants or the court to the Aerospatiale choice of seeking the documents through the Rule 34 process or the HEC. A “master” rule might also address depositions. Rule 28(b) provides options once the decision has been made to take a witness' testimony in a foreign country, but it doesn't address what might be the antecedent choice of whether to require foreign-based parties (or their officers or managing agents) to appear for depositions in the U.S. Moreover, Rule 28(b)'s list of options is buried where many lawyers and judges wouldn't even know to look. A “master” rule for cross-border discovery could also clearly address the relationship between Aerospatiale and interrogatories and requests for admission.

We're not saying this would be the best course. Rule drafting is tricky. Pesky details and complications often emerge only once the drafting starts. Sometimes the drafting process can refine or even change how we think about a topic, leading rule-makers to reject what seemed like a clear fix in favor of a different path.<sup>30</sup> But that's a feature of the system, not a bug, and perhaps even more reason to think about whether cross-border discovery is or is not susceptible to road mapping or comprehensive treatment.

We save for last what might be the most controversial topic: Should rule-makers revisit the result reached in Aerospatiale itself? Recall Aerospatiale's reasoning. The Court held that nothing in the HEC provided any “plain statement” sufficient to cut off the pre-existing authority of U.S. courts to exercise their traditional discovery powers over parties subject to their jurisdiction.<sup>31</sup> That holding described the state of the law as the Supreme Court found it. Nothing in Aerospatiale stops the U.S. from choosing a different path as a matter of internal law.

Indeed, nothing in Aerospatiale would be contravened if the civil discovery rules were to provide a nudge in favor of greater reliance on the HEC. Should there be a nudge? That was the view Justice Harry Blackmun took in his concurring Aerospatiale opinion (joined by three other justices). He worried that judges would gravitate toward using the known and liberal federal discovery scheme whenever possible rather than navigate the unfamiliar and potentially more restrictive HEC process. He supported the “first resort” rule rejected by the majority:

In my view, the Convention provides effective discovery procedures that largely eliminate the conflicts between United States and foreign law on evidence gathering. I therefore would apply a general presumption that, in most cases, courts should first resort to the Convention procedures.<sup>32</sup>

Longtime followers of the rule-making process may recall that the civil rules committee considered just such an amendment to Rule 26 in 1988, publishing a proposal to require parties to use treaty-based methods unless they ▶ “afford discovery that is inadequate.”<sup>33</sup> The proposal was modified in response to criticism in the public comments, but the modified version drew even more vigorous criticism.<sup>34</sup> Though the modified version was approved by the Judicial Conference, it was rejected by the Supreme Court.<sup>35</sup> The Advisory Committee tried once more after making some changes to the accompanying Committee Note, but this effort failed, too, when the Standing Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure refused to recommend it to the Judicial Conference.<sup>36</sup> The proposal was then abandoned.

In one sense, Justice Blackmun’s prediction seems to have been spot on.<sup>37</sup> Lawyers and judges seem no better versed in the HEC now than they were in 1987. In our experience, many lawyers view the HEC process as a quagmire to be avoided whenever possible. But is that view well-founded, or do lawyers not know how to use the HEC effectively because we’ve made it too easy to avoid? Perhaps a nudge is needed. Rule-makers could also take a fresh look at the factors to be considered.

The operative word is “could.” Rule-makers could follow Justice Blackmun’s lead and include some type of presumption or nudge toward using the HEC process. Or not. Analysis of and reflection upon 35 years of experience under Aerospatiale might persuade rule-makers that the Aerospatiale approach more or less gets it right as a matter of policy. Rule-makers could reach that conclusion and then choose to embed it in the rules. Or they could reach that conclusion and decide that it remains better left out of the rule scheme. They could even decide to leave the matter outside the scope of the project.

CONCLUSION

Cross-border discovery has become increasingly important to U.S. litigation practice. But the process remains confusing to most and avoided by many. It is also a part of discovery practice that has never really been integrated into the modern civil rules’ discovery scheme. We think that more and better guidance is needed — and possible. Accordingly, we propose that the Advisory Committee on Civil

Rules should undertake consideration of whether and how the civil rules might be amended to bring clarity and guidance to the realm of cross-border discovery, for the benefit of lawyers and judges alike.

<sup>3</sup> For simplicity, we will use the term “document” to include both paper documents and ESI.

<sup>4</sup> The issues we explore in this article can also arise in state court proceedings. See, e.g., In re Cote d’Azur Est. Corp., 286 A.3d 504 (Del. Ch. 2022) (issuing letter of request under the Hague Evidence Convention to Switzerland). Though we limit our focus to the intersection of cross-border discovery and the federal civil discovery rules, any changes made to the federal rules might serve as a model for states to follow.

778 7. Rule 41 Subcommittee Report

779 Since its formation at the October 2022 Committee meeting, following submissions in June 2021
780 by Judges Furman and Halpern (21-CV-O) and July 2022 by Messrs. Wenthold and Reynolds, former W.D.
781 Ky. law clerks (22-CV-J), the Subcommittee has wrestled with the availability of voluntary dismissal
782 without prejudice under Rule 41(a).

783 Rule 41(a)(1)(A), which remains substantially the same as when it was promulgated in 784 1938, provides that “the plaintiff may dismiss an action without a court order” by filing a notice
785 of dismissal “before the opposing party serves either an answer or a motion for summary
786 judgment” or a “stipulation of dismissal signed by all parties who have appeared.” Such a 787 dismissal is without prejudice unless the notice of dismissal or stipulation states otherwise, per 788 Rule 41(a)(1)(B). Rule 41(a)(2) provides that “[e]xcept as provided in Rule 41(a)(1), an action 789 may be dismissed at the plaintiff’s request only by court order, on terms that the court considers 790 proper.” Again, such a dismissal is without prejudice unless the order states otherwise.

791 The primary disagreement among federal courts is over whether a voluntary dismissal, 792 either unilateral or by stipulation, must be of the entire action or may be of something less, like the 793 dismissal of only some of the asserted claims or parties, leaving the remaining claims pending in 794 the district court. For instance, in a multi-defendant case, must a plaintiff dismiss all claims against 795 all defendants to dismiss without a court order, or may a plaintiff dismiss only the claims against 796 one or more defendants, while the others remain live? Or, in a multi-plaintiff case, must all 797 plaintiffs dismiss all of the claims asserted, or may only one plaintiff achieve a unilateral dismissal
798 while the others continue the litigation? An array of other configurations is possible.

799 Research by then-Rules Law Clerk Burton DeWitt revealed that the most common issue in 800 the reported cases concerned whether a plaintiff in multi-defendant cases may dismiss as to some 801 but not all defendants, a question on which the circuits are split.<sup>1</sup> Similar issues have arisen in 802 multi-plaintiff actions in which some but not all plaintiffs wish to dismiss claims against one or 803 more defendants. As to dismissal of some but not all claims against a given defendant, no circuit
804 has explicitly permitted Rule 41(a) to be used to effect such a dismissal, though intra-circuit splits
805 have developed at the district court level. Rules Law Clerk DeWitt therefore also suggested that 806 there might soon be a split among the circuits on whether the rule can be used to dismiss some but 807 not all claims against a given defendant.

808 The ramifications of interpreting the rule as allowing only dismissal of an “entire action”
809 go beyond just voluntary dismissals early on in the litigation or by stipulation. For example, the 810 “entire action” interpretation has also been applied to dismissals by court order under Rule
811 41(a)(2), which provides that “an action may be dismissed at the plaintiff’s request only by court
812 order, on terms that the court considers proper.” That is, in circuits where only an entire action 813 may be dismissed without a court order under Rule 41(a)(1), then only an entire action may be

<sup>1</sup> The Second, Sixth, and Seventh Circuits take the view that only an entire action may be dismissed under Rule 41(a); the First, Third, Fifth, Ninth, and Eleventh Circuits take the view that in a multi-defendant case, a plaintiff may dismiss all claims (though not fewer than all claims) against a single defendant under Rule 41. The Eighth and Tenth Circuits have not definitively addressed the issue. The state of play was recently comprehensively summarized in Interfocus Inc. v. Hirobi, No. 22-CV-2259, 2023 WL 4137886 (N.D. Ill. June 7, 2023). The Fourth, Tenth, and D.C. Circuits have not explicitly considered the issue, and the district courts within these circuits are split.

814 dismissed with a court order under Rule 41(a)(2) The Eleventh Circuit recently adopted this view 815 in Rosell v. VSMB LLC, 67 F.4th 1141, 1143 (11th Cir. 2023) (“Today we make explicit what our 816 precedent has implied for almost two decades: Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 41(a)(2) provides 817 only for the dismissal of an entire action. Any attempt to use this rule to dismiss a single claim, or 818 anything less than the entire action, will be invalid—just like it would be under Rule 41(a)(1).”)
819 Ultimately, then, if “action” means “entire action,” then there is no explicit mechanism to dismiss 820 only part of the action, whether by stipulation or court order.

821 Debates over the meaning of the current rule tend to focus on the text. Circuits adopting 822 the more restrictive approach focus on the plain meaning of the words (i.e., “action” means 823 “action,” and nothing less), while courts adopting the less restrictive approach focus more on the 824 purpose of the rule (i.e., parties should be allowed to narrow the case prior to trial to eliminate one 825 or more defendants as a matter of judicial economy).<sup>2</sup> Such debates, which are at least as much 826 about the proper approach to interpretation of statutes and rules as the substance of Rule 41, are 827 unlikely to go away.

828 Ultimately, beyond the meaning of the current rule, the underlying policy question is what 829 degree of flexibility a plaintiff should have to dismiss something less than an entire lawsuit without 830 giving up the possibility of raising the abandoned claims anew in another proceeding. If the 831 plaintiff should have any such flexibility, how and when may it be used? Undertaking a revision
832 of the rule requires analysis of these questions (including how Rule 41 interacts with other rules 833 addressing how a case might change during the course of pretrial proceedings, such as Rule 15 and 834 Rule 42).

835 Even beyond the question of how much of a case the plaintiff should be allowed to dismiss
836 voluntarily (either unilaterally or by stipulation) without prejudice, there remain other questions,
837 such as until when a plaintiff should be allowed to do so without a court order. Currently, the rule
838 allows such dismissals prior to service of an answer or motion for summary judgment, though it
839 could be further tightened by adding a Rule 12 motion to dismiss to the acts that cut off unilateral 840 dismissal, or loosened by extending the time for unilateral dismissal to a time closer to trial, as in 841 some states). Another question is, if dismissal of all claims against a single defendant by stipulation 842 is allowed, who must consent? Currently, the rule requires that such a stipulation be “signed by 843 all parties that have appeared,” but courts are split as to whether that language demands that such 844 a stipulation be signed by every party that has ever appeared in the case, even parties that already 845 been dismissed from the action. See City of Jacksonville v. Jacksonville Hospitality Holdings, No.
846 22-12419, 2023 WL 5944193 (11th Cir., Sept. 13, 2023) (requiring “each and every party that has 847 thus far appeared in a lawsuit to sign a stipulation of dismissal”).

848 Setting aside these somewhat ancillary questions, a rule that allows dismissal of nothing 849 less than an entire action places emphasis on the need for plaintiffs to carefully consider the 850 contours of their case prior to filing, since the only route to voluntarily dismissing claims or parties
851 is to amend the complaint under Rule 15. Arguably, Rule 41 should be addressed only to dismissals 852 of the entire action, and anything less should be left to Rule 15. But this solution is not without 853 some complication. As Judge Seeger recently explained, “[a]mending a complaint again and again

854 can clog up the docket and create confusion about which complaint is the operative pleading.
855 Imagine a docket with a sixth amended complaint, followed by a seventh amended complaint, 856 followed by an eighth amended complaint, and so on. Heads will start spinning.” Interfocus Inc.
857 v. Hirobi, No. 22-CV-2259, 2023 WL 4137886, at *2 (N.D. Ill. June 7, 2023). Judge Seeger also 858 noted that amending a complaint typically requires a motion and an amended answer—as he 859 summarizes it: “More pleadings equal more filings equal more burdens equal more expense.” Id.
860 at *3. It is possible that there are other avenues to dropping a party from a case, such as Rule 21
861 (“the court may at any time, on just terms, add or drop a party”), but such rules have not been 862 typically used in this way.

863 If voluntary dismissal of less than an entire case is permitted, it would make it easier to 864 narrow the factual and legal issues, or for parties to settle their claims and exit, along the way to 865 trial—an efficiency-enhancing practice that the rule should arguably encourage. A revised rule 866 might also be framed in a way that clarifies the effect of voluntary dismissal on attempts to achieve
867 an appealable final judgment, a problem that also crops up in the case law. Consider a plaintiff
868 who seeks immediate appellate review of a judgment dismissing some but not all claims. Absent
869 a finding that Rule 54(b) applies, judgment for a defendant on some but not all claims may not be 870 immediately appealed. But a plaintiff may prefer to seek immediate appeal of the adverse decision 871 on some claims to continuing to pursue the surviving claims. A more flexible approach to voluntary 872 dismissal would allow the plaintiff to forgo the remaining claims and pursue the appeal. Courts
873 that read Rule 41(a) to require voluntary dismissal of an entire lawsuit have rejected this 874 approach—even if a plaintiff has amended the complaint in an attempt to excise the surviving 875 claims. See, e.g., GEICO v. Glassco, 58 F.4th 1338 (11th Cir. 2023).

876 Although a circuit split on the meaning of Rule 41 has existed since at least the 1960s, and 877 cases demonstrating that the split has consequences are easily found, the case for revising the rule 878 is weaker if lawyers and judges are not encountering real-world problems with the operation of 879 the rule. Perhaps disuniform interpretation of the rule across the circuits is alone a sufficient reason
880 to undertake a revision. If the text does not accomplish the goals of the rule, or courts are ignoring 881 the text to accomplish such goals, perhaps the text requires an update. On the other hand, if the 882 current text works well enough, and revision might sow additional confusion or lead to unintended 883 consequences, perhaps muddling through is the best option.

884 In an attempt to answer that question more fully, the Subcommittee has engaged in several 885 outreach efforts to the bench and bar. On May 1, 2023, the Subcommittee met, via Zoom, with 886 members of Lawyers for Civil Justice (LCJ), and on May 2, 2023, the Subcommittee met, also via 887 Zoom, with members of the American Association for Justice (AAJ) to seek their feedback on the 888 current operation of Rule 41. Both groups expressed concerns about the current disuniformity
889 among the circuits and agreed that more clarity would be helpful. Both groups also agreed that it 890 should be easy to drop a defendant early on in a case if the plaintiff has erred by suing a party that 891 is clearly not liable. But, perhaps somewhat predictably, they disagreed sharply on the period of 892 time in which a plaintiff should be allowed to do so without a court order. Some members of LCJ
893 expressed that they would prefer that the cutoff for unilateral voluntary dismissal be moved back
894 to prior to service of a Rule 12 motion to dismiss, on the ground that voluntary dismissal without 895 prejudice after the filing of the Rule 12 motion renders the time and effort spent preparing that 896 motion a waste, despite that it results in dismissal of the pending action. In their view, states that 897 permit more flexibility by allowing voluntary dismissals of claims or parties without prejudice all

898 the way up to trial open the door to excessive gamesmanship by plaintiffs. For their part, AAJ 899 representatives advocated in favor of more flexibility in dismissing claims and parties based on 900 what emerges during discovery without the burden and expense of amending the complaint.

901 The Subcommittee has also recently sought feedback from federal judges, via the Federal 902 Judges Association. A letter from Judges Rosenberg and Bissoon (appended to this memo) was 903 sent to federal judges on September 5, 2023, seeking feedback to be sent via email by September
904 29, 2023. Once such feedback has come in, it will be summarized in an upcoming meeting.

905 In sum, Rule 41 presents a series of challenges. The circuit split over the meaning of the 906 rule is likely to persist. Consistent nationwide application of the rule is preferable, though 907 completely uniform interpretation of the rules is perhaps an unrealistic expectation. Whether the 908 circumstances on the ground require revision of Rule 41 to resolve the split among the circuits is 909 a challenging question.

910 Should the Subcommittee proceed to draft possible rule amendments, the subsequent 911 question will be: what should the rule accomplish, increased or reduced flexibility to unilaterally 912 dismiss claims without prejudice? If writing on a blank slate, there are several levers the 913 Committee could use to achieve that goal, including what can be dismissed (a claim, a party, the 914 entire action), when (by filing of a pre-answer motion to dismiss, answer, motion for summary 915 judgment, or some time prior to trial), by whom (unilaterally by the plaintiff, by stipulation of 916 some or all parties, or by the court after a motion), and to what effect (without prejudice, 917 presumptively without prejudice, or presumptively with prejudice). All options remain open, and 918 the Subcommittee is eager to hear reactions at the upcoming meeting. Resolving some or all of 919 these questions, and determining whether sufficient consensus exists on the path forward, can help 920 narrow the range of drafting possibilities.

Dear Colleagues:

We write on behalf of the Advisory Committee on Civil Rules. In response to several proposals, the committee has created a subcommittee, chaired by Judge Cathy Bissoon, to address whether, due to a circuit split, any amendments should be made to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 41(a), which pertains to voluntary dismissal of actions by plaintiffs. At its March 2023 meeting, the Advisory Committee expressed a desire to seek additional feedback from the bench and bar. This letter is one example of that effort. Does 41(a) create confusion or complication, in your experience? And, should the committee undertake the project of amending the rule, do you have any suggestions with respect to what any such amendment should attempt to accomplish, and how it might accomplish it? The current text of the rule is:

Rule 41. Dismissal of Actions

(a) VOLUNTARY DISMISSAL.

(1) By the Plaintiff.

(A) Without a Court Order. Subject to Rules 23(e), 23.1(c), 23.2, and 66 and any applicable federal statute, the plaintiff may dismiss an action without a court order by filing:

- (i) a notice of dismissal before the opposing party serves either an answer or a motion for summary judgment; or
- (ii) a stipulation of dismissal signed by all parties who have appeared.

(B) Effect. Unless the notice or stipulation states otherwise, the dismissal is without prejudice. But if the plaintiff previously dismissed any federal- or state-court action based on or including the same claim, a notice of dismissal operates as an adjudication on the merits.

(2) By Court Order; Effect. Except as provided in Rule 41(a)(1), an action may be dismissed at the plaintiff's request only by court order, on terms that the court considers proper. If a defendant has pleaded a counterclaim before being served with the plaintiff's motion to dismiss, the action may be dismissed over the defendant's objection only if the counterclaim can remain pending for independent adjudication. Unless the order states otherwise, a dismissal under this paragraph (2) is without prejudice.

Currently, the circuits interpret the meaning of the word “action” in the rule differently. In some circuits, a plaintiff seeking to dismiss a case under this rule must dismiss her entire case—that is, all claims against all defendants. Under this interpretation of the rule, voluntary dismissal of less than the entire action may not be achievable with or without a court order. Other circuits have interpreted the scope of the rule more flexibly to permit a plaintiff either to dismiss: (a) all claims against one of multiple defendants, while allowing the claims against any other defendants to go forward or (b) one of multiple claims against a defendant.

One threshold question, on which we would appreciate your feedback, is whether this disuniformity alone should prompt a rule amendment. In this case, the circuits diverge significantly on the meaning and applicability of the rule, and the differences in interpretation have spillover effects on the application of other rules, availability of appeal, and preclusive effect of judgments.

At the same time, however, it is not clear whether, despite the different application of the rule and its effects in different circuits, there is a “real-world problem” to solve, or whether a rule amendment, with its inherent risks of unanticipated consequences, is prudent. For example, any such rule amendment inevitably would affect the panoply of rules that govern modification of a case after it is filed, including amendments under Rule 15. Ultimately, should the committee decide to amend the rule, it will need to face a set of fundamental policy questions about how flexible the rules should be with respect to allowing parties to streamline cases prior to trial.

The original purpose of Rule 41(a), the text of which has remained essentially unchanged since the 1938 promulgation of the Federal Rules, was to shorten the time frame in which a plaintiff could dismiss unilaterally (that is, without a court order) and without prejudice. Prior to the adoption of the Federal Rules—and presently in some states—a plaintiff may voluntarily dismiss an action without prejudice when the litigation is well advanced, including at trial, and refile the case anew in another court. Rule 41(a) therefore serves to restrict the time period in which a plaintiff may unilaterally dismiss without prejudice to before the filing of an answer or motion for summary judgment. After that period, a court order is necessary to dismiss, and the judge may place conditions on that order. There does not appear to be any suggestion that the drafters of the rule considered the question that causes confusion today—perhaps understandably, given the increase in complex multiparty and multiclaim litigation since 1938. Some courts have responded to this development by permitting flexible application of the rule or by permitting parties to stipulate to dismissal of some but not all claims after a court order, while other courts have streamlined through the use of other rules. This diversity of approaches may serve as evidence that the rule needs to be amended, or that it is best left alone.

If you have any insights, experiences or concerns regarding Rule 41(a), we would ask that you send an email detailing those issues to [REDACTED] no later than September 29, 2023. Unattributed responses will be compiled and made public by the Civil Rules Advisory Committee. Thank you.

Subject: Suggestion for the Civil Rules Advisory Committee: Rule 41(a)

Dear Bob et al.,

With my S.D.N.Y. colleague, District Judge Philip Halpern, I have a suggestion for consideration by the Civil Rules Advisory Committee: whether Rule 41(a) should be amended to make clear whether it does or does not permit dismissal of some, but not all claims in an action. At present, courts appear to be divided on the question. Compare, e.g., CBX Res., L.L.C. v. ACE Am. Ins. Co., 959 F.3d 175, 177 (5th Cir. 2020) (“Rule 41(a) should not be available to dismiss only some claims a plaintiff has against a defendant.”), and Taylor v. Brown, 787 F.3d 851, 857 (7th Cir. 2015) (“Since we give the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure their plain meaning, Rule 41(a) should be limited to dismissal of an entire action.” (internal quotation marks, citation, and alterations omitted)), with Azkour v. Haouzi, No. 11-CV-5780 (RJS) (KNF), 2013 WL 3972462, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 1, 2013) (Sullivan, J.) (joining “other courts in [the Second] Circuit in interpreting Rule 41(a)(1)(A) as permitting the withdrawal of individual claims” (citing cases)). In case you are interested, the issue is discussed in my opinion in Alix v. McKinsey & Co., 470 F. Supp. 3d 310, 315 (S.D.N.Y. 2020), although I ultimately avoided the issue on which courts are split by concluding that the notice of dismissal there was with respect to the whole action as the only other claim (a federal RICO claim) had already been dismissed. If the Committee takes up the issue, it may also want to consider whether the Rule permits dismissal of an action as to one defendant in a multi-defendant case. My impression is that most, if not all, courts have held that it does - in which case there may be no need for amendment - but it might make sense to do a more comprehensive survey of the case law than I’ve done.

Please let me know if I should submit this suggestion through more formal channels and/or if you need anything else from me.

Many thanks,
Jesse Furman

Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure

Administrative Office of the United States Courts
One Columbus Circle NE
Washington, DC 20544

We write to bring to the Committee’s attention a deficiency in Rule 41 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. In regularly recurring circumstances, courts lack express authorization to dismiss one of several defendants at the plaintiff’s behest and without objection from the remaining parties. We identified this issue while clerking for Judge Benjamin Beaton<sup>1</sup> and decided to bring it to the Committee’s attention after seeing it repeatedly during our time with the court. And we’re not alone. As the Committee is aware, federal judges throughout the county have wrestled with and requested resolution of this issue.<sup>2</sup>

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 41(a) allows a plaintiff to voluntarily dismiss an action (in some circumstances) or ask the court to do so (in other circumstances).<sup>3</sup>

But what happens when a plaintiff, without objection from the defendants, wishes to dismiss one (or fewer than all) of several defendants? By its plain language, Rule 41 doesn’t apply because it allows parties to dismiss only an “action”—a term that, read literally, “refers to the whole of the lawsuit.”<sup>4</sup> There remain only two avenues under the Rules for a plaintiff seeking to dismiss against fewer than all defendants. First, she could amend her complaint under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15. Or second, in the case of misjoinder, a plaintiff could move for dismissal under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 21.

An “action” refers to the whole of the lawsuit. See Black’s Law Dictionary, at 37 (defining “action” as a “civil or criminal judicial proceeding”); Black’s Law Dictionary 43 (3d ed. 1933) (“The terms ‘action’ and ‘suit’ are now nearly, if not entirely, synonymous”). Individual demands for relief within a lawsuit, by contrast, are “claims.” See Black’s Law Dictionary, at 311 (2019) (defining a “claim” as “the part of a complaint in a civil action specifying what relief the plaintiff asks for”); Black’s Law Dictionary, at 333 (1933) (defining a “claim” as “any demand held or asserted as of right” or “cause of action”).

Id. (Sotomayor, J., concurring); see also Columbia Gas Transmission, LLC v. Raven Co., Inc., No. 12-72-ART, 2014 WL 12650688, at *1 (E.D. Ky. March 6, 2014) (Thapar, J.) (“Rule 41(a)(1)(A) only permits voluntary dismissal of an “action,” which according to the Sixth Circuit means the entire controversy—all claims against all defendants, not individual claims or parties.”).

Somewhere along the line, however, the courts blurred any Rules-based distinctions in this context by using Rules 15, 21, and 41(a) interchangeably, though inconsistently, in cases where a plaintiff sought to dismiss one of several defendants in a case.<sup>5</sup> According to Wright & Miller’s Federal Practice and Procedure, “the net result is that there is a certain amount of inconsistency in the cases.”<sup>6</sup> An understatement, to be sure. In reality, there are inter- and intra-circuit splits leaving litigants without clear guidance on this issue.<sup>7</sup> Another regrettable result of the widespread discrepancies is that district courts are left to do the best they can to muddle through “to secure the just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action and proceeding.”<sup>8</sup>

With an eye toward practicality and judicial economy, we agree with Wright & Miller’s assessment that it would “seem[] undesirable and unnecessary to invoke inherent power to avoid an artificial limit on Rule 41(a) that results from a highly literal reading of one word in that Rule.”<sup>9</sup> But fortunately, stretching the Rules beyond their plain meaning to cover these common circumstances isn’t the only answer. The Committee can amend the Rules to resolve this inconsistency.

We ask the Committee to step in and help clear the confusion. We also propose an amendment to Rule 41(a)(1)(A)—simply adding the words “or a claim.” The relevant part of the rule would then read: “Without a Court Order. Subject to Rules 23(e), 23.1(c), and 66 and any applicable federal statute, the plaintiff may dismiss an action or a claim without a court order . . . .”<sup>10</sup> The addition of these three words would simply and efficiently resolve what has become an unnecessarily murky issue by allowing a plaintiff to dismiss her cause(s) of action against individual defendants.

A potential (and perhaps obvious) objection to this revision comes to mind. One might argue that the proposed revisions miss the mark because Rule 41 is titled “Dismissal of Actions,” not “Dismissal of Actions and Claims.” True. But the title misrepresents the Rule as it currently exists; Rule 41 already allows the dismissal of claims in some instances.<sup>11</sup> And if the Committee is concerned with this inconsistency, it can always amend the title accordingly.

921 8. Rule 7.1 Subcommittee Report

922 The Rule 7.1 Subcommittee was created at the March 2023 Committee meeting. It is 923 chaired by Justice Jane N. Bland, and its other members are Judge Manish Shah and David 924 Burman, Esq. The Subcommittee had its first meeting on August 11, 2023, and has begun its work, 925 as detailed below. The Subcommittee’s ambit is to investigate possible amendments to Rule 7.1(a),
926 which governs disclosure of a party or potential intervenor’s corporate ownership. The Rule 927 currently reads:

928 Rule 7.1 Disclosure Statements

929 (a) Who Must File; Contents.

930 (1) Nongovernmental Corporations. A nongovernmental corporate party or a 931 nongovernmental corporation that seeks to intervene must file a statement that:

932 (A) identifies any parent corporation and any publicly held corporation owning 933 10% or more of its stock; or

934 (B) states that there is no such corporation.

935 The purpose of Rule 7.1(a), drawn from Rule 26.1 of the Federal Rules of Appellate 936 Procedure, is to provide district judges with the information necessary to comply with the recusal 937 statute, 28 U.S.C. § 455(b)(4). The statute provides that a judge “shall” recuse when:

938 He knows that he, individually or as a fiduciary, or his spouse or minor child 939 residing in his household, has a financial interest in the subject matter in 940 controversy or in a party to the proceeding, or any other interest that could be 941 substantially affected by the outcome of the proceeding[.]

942 28 U.S.C. § 455(b)(4). The statute defines “financial interest” as “ownership of a legal or equitable 943 interest, however small, or a relationship as director, adviser, or other active participant in the 944 affairs of a party,” with exceptions for mutual funds and other investment vehicles not central to 945 our efforts. Id. § 455(d)(4).

946 The language of § 455(b)(4) is echoed in the Code of Conduct for United States Judges,
947 Canon 3C(1)(c). As the Committee Note to Rule 7.1 explains, “the information required by Rule
948 7.1(a) reflects the ‘financial interest’ standard of Canon 3C(1)(c) [and] will support properly 949 informed disqualification decisions. . . .”

950 Two submissions to the Committee prompted the Subcommittee’s formation: one from 951 Judge Erickson (8th Cir.), and one from Magistrate Judge Barksdale (M.D. Fla.). In addition, the 952 Judicial Conference Code of Conduct Committee is examining recusal as it relates to interests held 953 in corporate affiliates.

954 Judge Erickson’s proposal (22-CV-H) addresses concerns that several judges own
955 significant interests in a wide array of other companies. Under current 7.1, for example, the Orange 956 Julius corporation would have to disclose that it is wholly owned by International Dairy Queen.

957 But the Rule would not expressly require the further disclosure that International Dairy Queen is 958 wholly owned by Berkshire Hathaway, potentially leaving a presiding judge with an ownership
959 interest in Berkshire Hathaway unaware of any need to evaluate whether such an interest presents 960 a basis for recusal.<sup>3</sup> Berkshire Hathaway is, of course, one example of the general problem. We 961 have been informally referring to relative opacity of a judge’s ownership interest in a corporation
962 that in turn owns an interest in a subsidiary that, in further turn, owns an interest in a party to a 963 case as the “grandparent problem,” though it may also apply to great-grandparents, and so on.

964 Separately, Magistrate Judge Barksdale has proposed that Rule 7.1 be amended to add a 965 certification requirement that appears to make use of the newly created database on judges’ stock
966 holdings (22-CV-F). This proposal would require a party to certify “that the party has checked the 967 assigned judge or judges’ publicly available financial disclosures and, if a conflict or possible
968 conflict exists, will file a motion to recuse or a notice of a possible conflict within 14 days of filing
969 the disclosure.” This proposal does not appear to address the “grandparent” issue directly, though 970 such investigation might have the effect of revealing such a relationship in some cases.

971 At the March 2023 Committee meeting, several members suggested that Judge Erickson’s
972 proposal may hold more promise for the time being. The Subcommittee preliminarily considered 973 both proposals at its August meeting and agreed to prioritize the issue as it relates to the scope of 974 disclosure (including, perhaps, the grandparent problem), in large part because of concerns about 975 whether the database of judicial holdings is reliably current. The database represents a snapshot of 976 a judge’s holdings at one moment in time, in the prior year, and it may thus be out of date by the 977 time of any particular litigation. Moreover, conflicts-check systems currently in use in the district 978 courts are thought to be reasonably effective at checking Rule 7.1 disclosures against judicial 979 financial disclosures. Yet another concern is the uncertain effect of a party’s failure to comply with 980 such a requirement, which could not relieve a judge of the statutory duty to recuse if it was later 981 determined that the judge had a financial conflict of interest that required recusal.

982 Zooming out from the grandparent problem, the primary concern about current Rule 7.1 is 983 that it does not sufficiently apprise judges of all situations in which they may be required to recuse.
984 That is, the Rule mandates disclosure of “any parent corporation and any publicly held corporation 985 owning 10% or more of its stock.” But the recusal statute and canon provide a different governing 986 standard than the Rule, requiring recusal if the judge has a financial interest “however small” in 987 the “subject matter in controversy or in a party to the proceeding, or any other interest that could 988 be substantially affected by the outcome of the proceeding.” 28 U.S.C. § 455(b)(d). The recusal 989 statute therefore potentially covers more than a financial interest in a parent of a party, or in a 990 10%+ owner of shares in a party.

<sup>3</sup> Nor would Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 26.1, on which Rule 7.1 is modeled. But the Committee Note to Rule 26.1 states that the “rule requires disclosure of all of a party’s parent corporations meaning grandparent and great grandparent corporations as well.” The degree to which this guidance is followed is uncertain. No such guidance appears in the Committee Note to Rule 7.1, but at least two district courts have read Rule 7.1 to require disclosure of a grandparent. See A. Benjamin Spencer, 5 FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 1197 n.5 (4th ed. 2022 update) (citing Faraj v. 6th and Island Investments LLC, No. 16-cv-00181, 2017 WL 385741, at *4 (S.D. Cal. Jan. 27, 2017); Harris v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., No. EDCV 16-645, 2016 WL 11486587, at *2 (C.D. Cal. July 14, 2016)). Additional research has thus far not revealed additional cases requiring disclosure; one other case rejected the reading that Rule 7.1 requires grandparent disclosure. McAllister v. Adecco Group, No. 16-00447, 2017 WL 11151050, at *1 (D. Haw. May 19, 2017).

991           Indeed, the current provisions are not designed to comprehensively apprise judges of every 992 imaginable instance in which they should evaluate whether a basis for recusal exists. Rather, the 993 provisions requiring disclosure of a 10% owner in a party in both our Rule 7.1 and Appellate Rule 994 26.1 are thought to be a proxy for control of a party on the theory that if the judge has a financial 995 interest in a company that controls a party, that may be a basis for recusal either on the ground of 996 financial interest or an interest that “could be substantially affected by the outcome of the 997 proceeding.” 28 U.S.C. § 455(b)(4). The Judicial Conference Committee on Codes of Conduct has 998 published a formal advisory opinion (no. 57) interpreting the Canon that holds this view. It states, 999 in pertinent part:

1000           The Committee concludes that under the Code the owner of stock in a parent
1001 corporation has a financial interest in a controlled subsidiary. Therefore, when a 1002 judge knows that a party is controlled by a corporation in which the judge owns 1003 stock, the judge should recuse. See Canon 3C(3)(c). When a parent company does 1004 not own all or a majority of stock in the subsidiary, the judge should determine 1005 whether the parent has control of the subsidiary. The Committee advises that the 1006 10% disclosure requirement in Fed. R. App. P. 26.1 is a benchmark measure of 1007 parental control for recusal purposes.

1008           The Committee Note to Rule 7.1 recognizes that the 10% disclosure requirement “does not
1009 cover all of the circumstances that may call for disqualification under the financial interest
1010 standard.” Rather, the Note explains:

1011           Although the disclosures required by Rule 7.1(a) may seem limited, they are 1012 calculated to reach a majority of the circumstances that are likely to call for 1013 disqualification on the basis of financial information that a judge may not know or 1014 recollect. Framing a rule that calls for more detailed disclosure will be difficult.
1015 Unnecessary disclosure requirements place a burden on the parties and on courts.
1016 Unnecessary disclosure of volumes of information may create a risk that a judge 1017 will overlook the one bit of information that might require disqualification, and also 1018 may create a risk that unnecessary disqualifications will be made rather than 1019 attempt to unravel a potentially difficult question. It has not been feasible to dictate 1020 more detailed disclosure requirements in Rule 7.1(a).

1021           To some degree, then, the Subcommittee’s task is to determine whether the considerations
1022 underlying the Committee Note remain sound, particularly in a period where judicial recusal has 1023 garnered increased attention of the media and lawmakers.

1024           Additionally, the Committee is not working in a vacuum. The Judicial Conference Code of 1025 Conduct Committee is considering revisions to its guidance. There is also Congressional activity 1026 in the form of a bill sponsored by Sen. Warren (which in part echoes a bill that failed to gain 1027 traction in the prior Congress). The Judicial Ethics and Anti-Corruption Act of 2023 (S. 1908)
1028 would bar a justice or judge from owning any interest in any security, trust, commercial real estate, 1029 or privately held company, with exceptions for mutual funds and government (or government-1030 managed) securities. The legislation would also require justices and judges to “maintain and 1031 submit to the Judicial Conference a list of each association or interest that would require the justice, 1032 judge, or magistrate to be recused” and “any financial interests of the judge, the spouse of the 1033 judge, or any minor child of the judge residing in the household of the judge.” The bill has been 1034 referred to the Judiciary Committee and future action is uncertain, but continued legislative 1035 attention is likely.

1036 Some Committee members indicated at the March 2023 meeting that financial disclosure 1037 is a significant, albeit delicate, problem that requires additional examination, despite the possibility
1038 that Congress might act in a way that makes a rule amendment unnecessary. Such inquiry includes 1039 investigating whether this is a “real-world problem” that is solvable by a Federal Rule. For 1040 instance, at the March 2023 meeting, some Committee members expressed skepticism about a 1041 rule’s ability to cover all of the complex and ever-changing potential ownership interests in a party, 1042 which, as one member put it, are changing “by the minute.” Moreover, the Subcommittee is 1043 mindful of the burden enhanced disclosures may place on parties, especially those with complex 1044 corporate structures.

1045 Should the Subcommittee pursue drafting possibilities, there are several paths it could take.
1046 Some inspiration may be drawn from local rules. Under Rule 83, districts may craft their own local 1047 rules on disclosure, so long as they are not inconsistent with Federal Rules. At the Subcommittee’s 1048 request, Rules Law Clerk Christopher Pryby prepared a very thorough memo (included in this 1049 agenda book) detailing the local rules in this area. Although 44 of the 94 districts do not have local 1050 rules on this subject, the others do, and they illustrate several different approaches that I have 1051 grouped into three rough categories.

1052 First, some districts expand the general categories of entities to be disclosed beyond a 1053 parent or an owner of 10% or more of the stock of a party. For instance, the Northern District of 1054 Texas requires parties to submit a “certificate of interested persons” including “all persons,
1055 associations of persons, firms, partnerships, corporations, guarantors, insurers, affiliates, parent or 1056 subsidiary corporations, or other legal entities that are financially interested in the outcome of the 1057 case.”<sup>4</sup> As Rules Law Clerk Pryby’s memo reveals, there is an array of variations on this language
1058 in the districts that have gone down this path. Another example is the Middle District of Tennessee, 1059 which focuses directly on the grandparent problem by requiring parties to “identify . . . all parent 1060 corporations, including grandparent and great-grandparent corporations.”<sup>5</sup>

1061 Second, some districts require disclosure of entities owning a smaller percentage of a 1062 party’s stock than 10%. For instance, the Northern District of Illinois requires disclosure of all 1063 “affiliates known to the party after a diligent review,” defined as “any entity or individual owning,
1064 directly or indirectly (through ownership of one or more other entities), 5% or more of a party.”<sup>6</sup>

1065 Third, some districts require disclosure of defined financial relationships beyond those 1066 mandated by Rule 7.1. For example, the Central District of California requires disclosure to the 1067 court of “any insurance carrier that may be liable in whole or in part (directly or indirectly) for a

<sup>6</sup> N.D. Ill. Civ. R. 3.2. The Eastern District of Missouri also requires disclosure of “any publicly held corporation or company that owns five percent (5%) or more of the subject’s stock.” E.D. Mo. R. 2.09.

1068 judgment in the action or for the cost of defense.”<sup>7</sup> For its part, the District of New Jersey requires 1069 disclosure of third-party litigation funding, but that implicates a complex and evolving area that is 1070 the scope of the Subcommittee’s charge.<sup>8</sup>

1071 This is, of course, a non-exclusive list. Both the efficacy of these various local rules, and 1072 courts’ and parties’ experience under them, may be subjects for further investigation. States also 1073 have their own creative approaches to this problem, and further research into those may be 1074 warranted. Whether these approaches lead to better information and more accurate application of 1075 the recusal statute than current Rule 7.1 is an open question, as is whether the gains in information 1076 further disclosure requirements would provide justifies the additional burdens placed on parties to 1077 comply with them.

1078 The Subcommittee welcomes the thoughts of the full Committee as this discussion moves 1079 forward.

Re: Survey of Local Rules Governing Corporate-Disclosure Statements in Federal District Courts

Date: August 27, 2023

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 7.1 requires a nongovernmental corporate party, upon its first appearance in a case, to file a statement disclosing “any parent corporation” of the party and “any publicly held corporation owning 10% or more of” the party’s stock.<sup>1</sup> The rule’s purpose, among other things, is to provide judges enough information to know whether the judge should recuse from the case. The Rule 7.1 Subcommittee (the “Subcommittee”) of the Advisory Committee on Civil Rules is

(a) Who Must File; Contents.

(1) Nongovernmental Corporations. A nongovernmental corporate party or a nongovernmental corporation that seeks to intervene must file a statement that:

- (A) identifies any parent corporation and any publicly held corporation owning 10% or more of its stock; or
- (B) states that there is no such corporation.

...

(b) Time to File; Supplemental Filing. A party, intervenor, or proposed intervenor must:

- (1) file the disclosure statement with its first appearance, pleading, petition, motion, response, or other request addressed to the court; and
- (2) promptly file a supplemental statement if any required information changes.

investigating whether to amend the rule—and, if so, how—to better serve that purpose.

District courts are free to promulgate local rules that require additional disclosures beyond those that Rule 7.1 mandates.<sup>2</sup> The Subcommittee is interested in what kinds of local disclosure rules the district courts have adopted. To that end, I have surveyed the 89 sets of district-court local civil rules, and this memorandum catalogs my findings.<sup>3</sup> Part I lists the district courts for which I could not find any local rules imposing requirements on corporate-disclosure statements, and Part II lists those local rules I did find. In Part II, I have underlined the portions prescribing the contents of the disclosures with respect to corporate financial interests. Last, for the reader's convenience, I have included an appendix of links to each district court's local civil rules.

<sup>3</sup> Although there are 94 district courts, five pairs of courts share local rules: the Eastern and Western Districts of Arkansas, the Northern and Southern Districts of Iowa; the Eastern and Western Districts of Kentucky; the Northern and Southern Districts of Mississippi; and the Eastern and Southern Districts of New York.

Note that this survey does not include other local rules (criminal, bankruptcy, tax, etc.), nor does it include local forms or orders that were not attached to or referenced by a court's local civil rules. For a survey with broader coverage, see Memorandum from Ahmad Al Dajani to Judge Robert Dow et al. on Third Party Litigation Finance (June 28, 2019) (on file with the Rules Committee Staff).

Subject: Problems Associated with Berkshire Hathaway holdings by judges

Good Morning,

I just wanted to pass on a couple of recurring issues that I'm being contacted about by judges around our circuit—and from a couple from outside the Eighth Circuit.

A number of judges have contacted me indicated that they have holdings in Berkshire Hathaway and that they have accumulated substantial capital gains that would be problematic if they moved the investment into ETFs or Mutual funds. Each of them called me because he or she had recently discovered that Berkshire Hathaway was either a parent or the parent of a parent company. The parent companies are usually disclosed on the Rule 7.1 disclosure and are caught before a judge acts or is even assigned. The problem arises when Berkshire Hathaway is the parent company of a parent company and the disclosure does not appear to be required under Rule 7.1 of the FRCivP. As an example, Orange Julius of America is wholly owned by International Dairy Queen. In compliance with Rule 7.1 Orange Julius would disclose that International Dairy Queen is its parent company—but it would not disclose that IDQ is wholly owned by Berkshire Hathaway. In some cases judges have presided only to find out later about the relationship. People who own CitiGroup have similar problems as CitiGroup has a controlling interest in some 300 companies. Given the breadth of Canon 3C(1) and the broad definition of “financial interest” in 3C(3)(C) of the Code of Conduct for United States Judges, as well as the guidance in Advisory Opinion 57 the conflict is a thorny one for judges to maneuver in the field.

This brings to mind a couple of issues, one for the Codes Committee and one for the Civil Rules Advisory Committee. First, should we amend the Certificate of Divestiture process so as to allow judges a window to preemptively divest themselves of these sorts of holdings and move into qualified investments and get a Certificate of Divestiture? As I said, the large capital gains tax is the main reason that judges still hold these investments even though they know they create a conflict nightmare.

Second, should we amend Rule 7.1 to require the disclosure of companies that hold the parent corporations of corporations in a parent relationship to a party to the action? It seems to me that more information rather than less is prudent in today's environment.

Thanks for your consideration. Have a great Independence Day holiday!

To address issues with financial conflicts of interest, please consider amending Rule 7.1 to require a nongovernmental corporate party, when filing a disclosure statement, to certify the party has checked the assigned judges' publicly available financial disclosures and, if a conflict or possible conflict exists, will file a motion to recuse or a notice of a possible conflict of interest.

Rule 7.1. Disclosure Statement

(a) WHO MUST FILE; CONTENTS. A nongovernmental corporate party must file ~~2 copies of~~ a disclosure statement that:

(1) identifies any parent corporation and any publicly held corporation owning 10% or more of its stock; or states that there is no such corporation;

~~(2) states that there is no such corporation and~~

~~(3) certifies that the party has checked the assigned judge or judges' publicly available financial disclosures and, if a conflict or possible conflict exists, will file a motion to recuse or a notice of a possible conflict within 14 days of filing the disclosure.-~~

(b) TIME TO FILE; SUPPLEMENTAL FILING. A party must:

(1) file the disclosure statement with its first appearance, pleading, petition, motion, response, or other request addressed to the court; and

(2) promptly file a supplemental statement with a supplemental certificate, if any required information changes.

MEMORANDUM

DATE: September 18, 2023

TO: Advisory Committees on Appellate, Civil, and Criminal Rules<sup>1</sup>

FROM: Catherine T. Struve

RE: Project on self-represented litigants' filing and service

As you know, a working group that was convened to consider filing methods open to self-represented litigants has been studying two broad topics: (1) increases to electronic access to court by self-represented litigants (whether via CM/ECF or alternative means) and (2) service (of papers subsequent to the complaint) by self-represented litigants on litigants who will receive a notice of electronic filing (NEF) through CM/ECF or a court-based electronic-noticing program.

In spring 2023, Tim Reagan and I conducted additional interviews of court personnel on these topics, and I enclose a report that summarizes findings from those interviews. This memo provides a very brief update concerning the working group's summer 2023 discussions on both the filing and the service topics.

The service topic concerns whether to repeal the current rules' apparent requirement that non-CM/ECF users serve CM/ECF users separately from the NEF generated after a filing is scanned and uploaded into CM/ECF. The Appellate, Bankruptcy, Civil, and Criminal Rules require that litigants serve their post-case-initiation filings<sup>2</sup> on all other parties to the litigation. But because notice through CM/ECF constitutes a method of service, the rules effectively exempt CM/ECF filers from separately serving their papers on persons that are registered users of CM/ECF. By contrast, the rules can be read to require non-CM/ECF filers to serve their papers on all other parties, even those that are CM/ECF users. In the advisory committees' discussions of this topic during the past year, participants were receptive to the possibility of amending the service rules to eliminate the requirement of paper service on those receiving

1 The Bankruptcy Rules Committee, of course, is also a part of the project discussed in this memo, but as of this writing that Committee has already met. It received an oral report along the same lines expressed in this memo.

2 The rules provide separately for the service of case-initiating filings. See, e.g., Civil Rule 4 (addressing service of summons and complaint). As noted, the discussion here focuses on filings subsequent to the initiation of a case.

NEFs. At the working group's most recent (September 2023) meeting, participants expressed support for that idea, but also suggested a number of possible drafting changes to the then-extant sketch of a possible amendment. That redrafting is yet to be done, so I am not including here a sketch of a possible amendment. We intend to develop that proposal in the coming months.

On the filing topic, last year's round of advisory-committee discussions disclosed both some support for adopting a rule that would broaden self-represented litigants' access to CM/ECF and also a fair amount of opposition to adopting a rule that would require broad access for self-represented litigants to CM/ECF. In the light of those discussions, at its September 2023 meeting the working group considered the possibility of proposing a rule that would merely disallow districts from adopting blanket bans entirely denying all CM/ECF access to all self-represented litigants. Such a rule might say that even if a district generally disallows CM/ECF access for self-represented litigants it must make reasonable exceptions to that policy. That idea, like the service idea, has not yet taken shape in draft form. At the fall advisory committee meetings, I welcome the opportunity to gather input on whether such a rule could be drafted in such a way as to address the concerns expressed by participants in the process who are most wary of a broad right of CM/ECF access.

MEMORANDUM

DATE: September 18, 2023

TO: Advisory Committees on Appellate, Bankruptcy, Civil, and Criminal Rules

FROM: Catherine T. Struve

RE: Update concerning spring 2023 district-court interviews

We are indebted to the 17 interviewees, who took time from their extremely busy schedules to share their courts' experiences with us. And I am also indebted to Tim, who guided my research and provided me with the entrée that enabled us to talk with the court staff with whom we spoke – many of whom he or his colleagues had interviewed in the course of last year's research. His and his colleagues' study provided the foundation for this further research, and Tim's expert presence on our video meetings and phone calls was invaluable. Tim also generously allowed me to choose the focus of this round of follow-up interviews.

I chose to focus this round specifically on personnel in districts where – we believed – the district has adopted the approach of exempting litigants from separate service on CM/ECF participants. But once we had the opportunity to talk with court personnel from a given district, of course we took the opportunity to ask them about the other two topics (CM/ECF access, and alternative modes of electronic access) as well. And in some instances, we also had the opportunity to inquire about special programs that the district had adopted concerning incarcerated litigants.<sup>3</sup> To make the inquiry manageable, I restricted our scope to district courts

---

1 In some instances, more than one person joined the interview: we spoke with two people in the District of Arizona, two in the District of Columbia, five in the District of Kansas, two in the Western District of Pennsylvania, and two in the District of South Carolina.

2 The districts in question were: D. Ariz.; D.D.C.; N.D. Ill.; D. Kan.; W.D. Mo.; S.D.N.Y.; W.D.Pa.; D.S.C.; and D. Utah.

We also interviewed a Pro Se Law Clerk from another district, but that interview turned out to be brief because she explained that her district does not actually engage in any of the service or filing practices on which we wanted to focus.

3 Those inquiries are omitted from this memo, in part because we did not have time to pursue them in all interviews.

(not bankruptcy or appellate courts) and focused our questions on the practice in civil cases (not criminal cases). This memo first sketches some findings concerning the service issue, and then turns to CM/ECF and alternative electronic access.

I. Exempting litigants from separate service on CM/ECF participants

We confirmed through our interviews that the following districts have exempted paper filers from traditionally serving papers<sup>4</sup> on litigants who are on CM/ECF:

- The District of Arizona
- The Northern District of Illinois
- The Western District of Missouri
- The Southern District of New York
- The Western District of Pennsylvania
- The District of South Carolina
- The District of Utah

For short, I'll refer to these districts as the "service-exemption" districts. Notably, these districts vary in how explicitly their published materials tell self-represented litigants about the exemption; only one of these districts is very explicit and consistent on this point.<sup>5</sup>

Once we confirmed that a district was indeed a service-exemption district, we asked the personnel from that district the questions noted in Part I.B of my March 3, 2023 memo.

Those personnel reported no problems with the implementation of the service-exemption policy. We specifically asked about burdens on the clerk's office, and no one could think of any.<sup>6</sup> One interviewee stated that the lawyers representing other parties in the case don't want paper copies of filings anyway.<sup>7</sup>

As to the question, how do the self-represented litigants know who is in CM/ECF (and need not be separately served) and who is not in CM/ECF (such that separate service is still

4 As discussed previously, we are focusing here on Civil Rule 5 service (that is, for papers subsequent to the complaint), not on Civil Rule 4 service.

5 The Southern District of New York is explicit: "Where the Clerk scans and electronically files pleadings and documents on behalf of a pro se party, the associated NEF constitutes service." S.D.N.Y. ECF Rules & Instructions 9.2; see also id. Rules 9.1, 19.1, & 19.2; Role of the Pro Se Intake Unit, <https://www.nysd.uscourts.gov/prose/role-of-the-prose-intake-unit>.

6 Interviewees who responded to the burdens question and said no included: D. Ariz.; N.D. Ill. (no effect on the clerk's office because "We don't monitor how service is done."); W.D. Mo. (might even save clerk's office "a little smidge" of work because they need not deal with later filing of a certificate of service); W.D. Pa.; S.D.N.Y.; D.S.C.

required), responses varied. It was noted that this particular question would only arise in a case where multiple parties are not on CM/ECF – which some of our interviewees noted would be unusual.<sup>8</sup> Also, even in such a case, the question would arise only if the person making the paper filing was not enrolled in an electronic-noticing program (because such a program would generate a NEF when the paper filing was entered in CM/ECF, and the NEF would state if any other party to the case required traditional service).<sup>9</sup> One interviewee said they thought that this information might be included in a notice that the court sends to self-represented parties early in the case.<sup>10</sup> A number of interviewees observed that a useful way to discern who needs traditional service is to look at the docket; if it shows no email address for a self-represented litigant, that is a tip-off that the person is not receiving electronic noticing.<sup>11</sup> Interviewees from another district stated that the issue might be addressed in a court order early in the case.<sup>12</sup> Interviewees from two districts said that the issue simply had not arisen.<sup>13</sup>

In at least three of the relevant five or six districts,<sup>14</sup> the service exemption encompassed both service on CM/ECF participants and service on participants in a court-run electronic-noticing program,<sup>15</sup> but one interviewee surmised that the program in their district encompassed only service on CM/ECF participants and not service on participants in the court-run electronic-noticing program<sup>16</sup> and, upon reviewing my notes, I am not sure that I posed this question to the interviewee from one other district.<sup>17</sup>

8 N.D. Ill. (interviewee stated this would be very rare, but might arise in a lawsuit involving spouses, or a lawsuit in which two individuals are jointly suing the police); W.D. Mo. (interviewee could not think of a case involving more than one self-represented party); D.S.C. (interviewee stated that “theoretically that could happen, but as a practical matter it hasn’t been a concern”).

11 D. Ariz.

12 W.D. Mo.; D.S.C.

13 W.D. Pa. (clerk’s office assumes that litigants comply with their service requirements); D. Utah.

14 If my memory serves, the District of South Carolina does not offer electronic noticing.

In the W.D. Pa., there is no formal electronic-noticing program separate from CM/ECF, but self-represented litigants may register for CM/ECF but continue filing by paper if they wish. If a self-represented litigant signs up to use CM/ECF but is making paper filings, that litigant need not be traditionally served.

15 D. Ariz.; S.D.N.Y. ECF Rules & Instructions 9.1 (the service exemption encompasses service on “all Filing and Receiving Users who are listed as recipients of notice by electronic mail”); id. 2.2(b) (“A pro se party who is not incarcerated may consent to be a Receiving User (one who receives notices of court filings by e-mail instead of by regular mail, but who cannot file electronically).”); D. Utah.

16 N.D. Ill.

17 W.D. Mo.

Our interviewees confirmed that when a litigant makes a filing in paper, that filing will always be scanned by the clerk’s office and placed into CM/ECF.<sup>18</sup> (Interviewees noted a few exceptions, such as documents submitted by a person who is under a filing restriction,<sup>19</sup> documents submitted by a litigant whose case had been closed for several years,<sup>20</sup> documents submitted for in camera review, documents that have no discernible connection to any litigation,<sup>21</sup> correspondence to the judge that should not be filed in the case.<sup>22</sup>) A number of interviewees reported that their office sets a goal for the maximum time interval between the court’s receipt of a paper filing and the time when that filing has been scanned and is entered into CM/ECF;<sup>23</sup> the goals ranged from 12 business hours<sup>24</sup> to one business day<sup>25</sup> or two business days.<sup>26</sup>

In some districts, a filing that is made under seal would need to be traditionally served on the other participants in the case, because in those districts that filing would not be available to the parties in the case via CM/ECF.<sup>27</sup> But that’s true of filings made under seal by attorneys via CM/ECF, just as it would be true of paper filings made under seal by a self-represented litigants; in either event, the filer would be directed to serve the filing on the other parties by traditional 20 D. Utah (interviewee stated that depending on the filing, they would check with chambers before docketing such a submission).

21 S.D.N.Y. (the stated example was a document “talking about [the litigant’s] meatloaf recipe”; the clerk’s office would consult the judge before docketing such an item).

22 W.D. Pa. (judge might determine that certain correspondence should not be filed, e.g., a letter from a criminal defendant discussing their lawyer’s performance in ways that implicate attorney-client privilege); S.D.N.Y. (letter threatening the judge).

23 I did not note a specific goal stated by the interviewees from the W.D. Pa., but they stated that the usual turnaround time from opening to scanning to docketing is generally from 4 to 6 business hours.

24 N.D. Ill. (this is the goal, but it is hard to meet on the Tuesday after a Monday holiday).

25 W.D. Mo. (interviewee stated that the informal deadline is 24 hours not counting weekends, but “99.5 percent” of paper filings are docketed the day that the court receives them); D.S.C.; D. Utah (goal is to enter paper documents within 24 hours, excluding holidays and weekends).

See also D.D.C. (for filings in an existing case; listed here as a “see also” because D.D.C. apparently does not exempt paper filers from serving those who get NEFs).

26 D. Ariz. (goal is same day or next day; in context I think “business day” was implicit); S.D.N.Y. (48 hours – not counting weekends – from stamping the document received to docketing on CM/ECF).

27 E.g., D. Ariz.; N.D. Ill. (local provision points out that the NEF for a sealed filing does not count as service); W.D. Mo. CM/ECF Admin. Manual at 8; W.D. Pa.; D. Utah ECF Admin. Procedural Manual 21, 28-29.

means.<sup>28</sup> In other districts, it is possible to set the restrictions for the CM/ECF filing so that the document is viewable both by the court and the other parties.<sup>29</sup>

It appeared that some but not all of the districts had thought about how to treat the calculation of time periods measured from service when the service is effected through CM/ECF but the filing was filed other than through CM/ECF. An interviewee in one district reported that this issue does not come up, but thought that a sensible way to approach this question is to count the date of entry in the CM/ECF docket (i.e., the date of the NEF) as the date of service.<sup>30</sup> An interviewee in another district stated that the issue has not arisen in their experience, perhaps because the clerk's office tends to get paper filings up onto CM/ECF pretty quickly.<sup>31</sup> An interviewee in a third district also reported that the issue has not come up, probably because briefing schedules are typically set by the judge.<sup>32</sup> An interviewee in another district treats the date of entry into CM/ECF (that is, the date of the NEF) as the relevant starting point for response periods that run from service.<sup>33</sup> Two districts apparently treat the date the court receives the filing (not the date of entry into CM/ECF) as the relevant starting point for response periods that run from service, and do not accord the responding party three extra days for the response.<sup>34</sup>

II. Access to CM/ECF for self-represented litigants

When interviewing personnel from districts that provide CM/ECF access to non-incarcerated self-represented litigants (either across the board or by permission), we asked a number of questions about how that is working. Since this suite of questions concerned experience with CM/ECF access for self-represented litigants, we posed these questions only to those from districts that provide that access to some degree.<sup>35</sup> Among the districts encompassed

28 D. Ariz. (“attorneys are often worse” than self-represented litigants about separately serving sealed documents on the other parties); N.D. Ill (“attorneys get into trouble on this”); W.D. Mo. (noting that the other party would know of the filing’s existence based on the NEF, so they would know to follow up with the filer if the document were not separately served on them as required by the local provision).

35 The D.S.C. does not permit any self-represented litigants to use CM/ECF. An interviewee in our interviews, the districts that provide access to all self-represented litigants (at the litigant's option) without the need for special permission are:

- District of Kansas (where an interviewee reports that “one or two percent of our [CM/ECF] filers are pro se users”).
- Western District of Missouri (where an interviewee estimates that there are about 20 to 25 self-represented litigants currently using CM/ECF).<sup>36</sup>
- Western District of Pennsylvania (where an interviewee estimates that there are “maybe a couple of dozen” self-represented litigants using CM/ECF at any given time).<sup>37</sup>

The districts that provide access to self-represented litigants with court permission are:

- District of Arizona<sup>38</sup> (where an interviewee reports that CM/ECF participation by self-represented litigants is “not rare”).
- District of the District of Columbia (where an interviewee reports “a lot of pro se filers on CM/ECF”).
- Northern District of Illinois.
- Southern District of New York (where the interviewee reports that it is unusual for a self-represented litigant to use CM/ECF; those who do are usually pro se attorneys).

---

from that district volunteered that she would oppose any rule amendment that required a district to allow such litigants to access CM/ECF. I responded that the proposals currently under consideration would, at most, foreclose a district from having a blanket ban on CM/ECF access [see Suggestion No. 20-CV-EE (John Hawkinson)]. The interviewee stated that a blanket ban is necessary in her district because the court wishes to treat all pro se litigants uniformly.

<sup>37</sup> See W.D. Pa. ECF Policies & Procedures at 2-3: “A person who is a party to an action who is not represented by an attorney may register as a Filing User in the Electronic Filing System solely for purposes of the action. If during the course of the action the person retains an attorney who appears on the person's behalf, the attorney must advise the clerk to terminate the person's filing privileges as a Filing User upon the attorney's appearance.

When registering, an individual must certify that ECF training has been completed, and then requests a CM/ECF account for the Western District of Pennsylvania through PACER. Once the request is processed by the clerk, the Filing User will receive notification that the request was approved.”

Uniformly, the interviewees reported that there was no difficulty in keeping track of self-represented litigants on CM/ECF.<sup>39</sup> You will recall that this question arose in committee discussions because self-represented litigants, unlike lawyers, do not have attorney ID numbers. Interviewees in two districts stated that their court wouldn't keep track of attorneys on CM/ECF via their attorney ID numbers.<sup>40</sup> Several interviewees noted that each CM/ECF registrant (whether or not they are a lawyer) has a "PRID" number<sup>41</sup> – which is a unique personal identifier – though one of those interviewees observed that their court hardly ever uses the PRID, because they can usually just look up a self-represented litigant using their name.<sup>42</sup> One interviewee noted that the CM/ECF system will have an email address on file for the litigant.<sup>43</sup>

Interviewees from a number of districts reported that their staff do quality control on all CM/ECF filings, whether made by self-represented litigants or by attorneys.<sup>44</sup> Two interviewees mentioned that the filings made on behalf of attorneys are often made – in actuality – by paralegals;<sup>45</sup> one of these interviewees reported that mistakes occur about equally frequently by attorneys and by self-represented litigants,<sup>46</sup> and the other reported that their office finds far more errors by lawyers, especially by attorneys who usually practice in state court.<sup>47</sup> One interviewee reported that, in the course of their quality control, they will correct a wrong event choice (or the like) whether made by an attorney or by a self-represented litigant.<sup>48</sup> Interviewees from three districts reported that they might need to do more review for quality control and make corrections more frequently for self-represented litigants.<sup>49</sup> An interviewee from another district

Among the seven relevant districts, one requires training for both attorneys and self-represented users of CM/ECF,<sup>53</sup> while (probably) two require training only for the self-represented users<sup>54</sup> and three do not require training for either group.<sup>55</sup> One district requires that the self-represented litigant certify completion of the training as part of their application for permission to use CM/ECF.<sup>56</sup> Training and/or information varied among the districts that provide it, with written training materials being the most common but with some districts providing video training modules<sup>57</sup> and one district providing a particularly helpful step-by-step

Interviewees reported favorably on their court's experience with CM/ECF access for self-represented litigants.<sup>59</sup> The most commonly noted benefit (to the court)<sup>60</sup> of CM/ECF access for self-represented litigants was the decrease in the volume of paper filings.<sup>61</sup> A number of our interviewees pointed to a huge savings in court time – that is, opening mail, sorting it, scanning it, and uploading the electronic version to the docket.<sup>62</sup> Some also like not having to handle tangible papers that might be hard to scan, fragmentary, or odorous.<sup>63</sup> Because CM/ECF access also includes electronic noticing via the NEF, interviewees also strongly praised the saving in court time spent on sending notice of court orders – printing, mailing, and re-sending the mailings that are returned by the Post Office – and also the savings on mailing costs.<sup>64</sup> A number of interviewees also praised the benefits of the electronic record, which averts disputes with the litigant concerning what the litigant filed and when<sup>65</sup> and what orders the court sent out and when.

The interviewees had a range of views about the burdens on the clerk's office occasioned by self-represented litigants' access to CM/ECF.<sup>66</sup> One interviewee noted that sometimes a self-represented litigant might complain that they had a problem with their “one free look” at a filing via the NEF.<sup>67</sup> An interviewee from another district reported no extra burdens occasioned by self-represented litigants' CM/ECF access.<sup>68</sup> Interviewees from another district noted that they will check whether a litigant is subject to a filing restriction, and that occasionally the court has removed the CM/ECF privileges of a problem filer (with the problematic filings in such cases typically being problematic because of their volume, that is, too many filings); but these interviewees reported (respectively) no “undue stress on the system” and that “overall [the access] is probably helpful”.<sup>69</sup>

On the question of inappropriate filings, the overall view was that these could present problems whether filed in paper or electronically, and that either way the burden on the court was manageable.<sup>70</sup> One interviewee observed that self-represented litigant CM/ECF privileges did open the possibility that an inappropriate filing would be viewable on CM/ECF until court staff had a chance to review it; on the other hand, this interviewee observed that the staff in their district – when scanning in a paper filing – check only the caption, case number, and signature, but not every page of the document.<sup>71</sup> This interviewee could only think of one self-represented litigant, in the course of a decade, who filed an inappropriate item in CM/ECF; staff spotted the filing (a document containing inappropriate images) while auditing and immediately restricted access to it, and revoked the petitioner's CM/ECF privileges.<sup>72</sup> In another district, the interviewees could not think of an instance of inappropriate language or images filed via CM/ECF, though they could think of one involving a paper filer.<sup>73</sup> And in a third district, the interviewee noted that court personnel will simply restrict access to a problematic filing when necessary, and that even those filings tend to be made in good faith (e.g., pictures relating to a surgery or an injury);<sup>74</sup> this interviewee could think of only one self-represented litigant who made “scandalous” filings, and observed that the court promptly handled that situation by order.<sup>75</sup> In another district, the interviewee did note that services such as Lexis and Westlaw

(“that was a bit of an ordeal when it was happening, but the judge acted quickly, and there was no public interest in the documents”; the court set up immediate notifications to chambers when this litigant made a filing, so that the court could quickly review them and decide whether to restrict electronic access).

scan the court's electronic dockets constantly and will download new filings right away.<sup>76</sup> Multiple interviewees observed that rescinding CM/ECF privileges is always an option.<sup>77</sup>

None of the districts in question uses a “gating” system (that is, holding self-represented litigants’ court filings for clerk’s office review after a document is filed in CM/ECF and before it is made viewable by people other than court personnel). A number of our interviewees noted that it would be possible to configure CM/ECF so that it worked this way (for example, by creating a separate user group for self-represented litigants and then only giving that user group access to events that would be restricted to court viewing only).<sup>78</sup> But two interviewees observed that their district hadn’t felt the need to adopt such a practice.<sup>79</sup> One interviewee observed that it would take valuable clerk’s office time to engage in such a review.<sup>80</sup> And another interviewee suggested that the relevant court of appeals would look askance at the constitutionality of restricting (even temporarily) who could view a litigant’s filings.<sup>81</sup>

We asked about inappropriate sharing of CM/ECF credentials, and among our interviewees, only one cited an example involving a self-represented litigant – specifically, a case in which a mother was the listed plaintiff in a case but her son would use her PACER account to file documents.<sup>82</sup> But the interviewee who provided that example also stated that they “had not seen a huge problem,” and that the “majority of mistakes concerning sharing of credentials come from law firms.”<sup>83</sup> A number of interviewees observed that, because access to NextGen CM/ECF entails linking the person’s PACER account with the particular case, sharing credentials would mean sharing the PACER login – and there is a built-in disincentive to share the PACER login because that would enable the other person to run up PACER bills on the person’s PACER account.<sup>84</sup> Also, a number of these districts restrict a self-represented litigant’s CM/ECF access to only those cases in which the self-represented litigant is a party,<sup>85</sup>

78 D.D.C.; D.Kan.; S.D.N.Y.

85 D. Ariz.; D.D.C. (access is granted on a per-case basis); D. Kan. (interviewee stated that “you have to be associated with the case, and there is a mechanism within the profile for that case, where we have to turn on their e filing privileges”); W.D. Mo.; W.D. Pa.; S.D.N.Y.

which by definition limits the incentive to share the credentials with some other person for reasons unrelated to the litigant's case.

All but one of these districts require the self-represented litigant to initiate their case by other means; so CM/ECF access for self-represented litigants in these districts occurs only once the case has gotten started.<sup>86</sup> (By contrast, in some of these districts lawyers can initiate a case via CM/ECF, while in others even lawyers cannot do so.) In one district, new cases can be initiated electronically in a "shell case," and then the clerk's office moves the case over in a real case docket; and this process is available to self-represented litigants who are registered in CM/ECF; but only a handful of self-represented litigants have used this method.<sup>87</sup>

We also asked these interviewees what resources a court would find necessary or useful if it were to permit or expand CM/ECF access for self-represented litigants. Here are their suggestions:

- Learn from your peers in other courts.<sup>88</sup>
- Use a pilot program, take things one step at a time, and see how a new program goes.<sup>89</sup>
- Involve your pro se law clerks in drafting your CM/ECF rules and procedures.<sup>90</sup>
- Plan how you will rescind CM/ECF access if necessary.<sup>91</sup>

By contrast, our interviewee from the Northern District of Illinois asserted that it is not technically possible to limit access to just one case. I now think that what he may have meant is that if you grant a litigant access to CM/ECF for one of their cases, and they have multiple cases in the district, the grant of access operates across all of their cases. We certainly did hear from other districts that it was possible to limit access such that the self-represented litigant could not file in cases to which they are not a party.

86 D. Ariz. (interviewee noted that, for IFP cases, this effectively means no CM/ECF filing access until after the case has survived the initial IFP case review); D.D.C. (suggestions included convening a seminar at which courts that don't yet allow self-represented litigants to use CM/ECF can learn peer-to-peer (chief judge to chief judge, clerk to clerk) how it works in the districts that have been doing it for a while); W.D. Mo. (interviewee suggested consulting personnel in districts that are similar in size or within the same circuit).

- Build a very simple menu in CM/ECF for the pro se filers, with only a few simple events, so as to limit the options that they will see when they use the system.<sup>92</sup>
- Put together a training on CM/ECF (which the court should already have done for their attorney filers).<sup>93</sup>
- Have good instructional documentation online.<sup>94</sup>
- Make sure that your help-desk staff can explain how the system works, especially how to select the right event when filing.<sup>95</sup>
- Make clear to the would-be self-represented CM/ECF filer that the court will not provide remedial technical support such as teaching them how to make PDFs or how to troubleshoot their wi-fi connectivity.<sup>96</sup>
- In one district, the interviewees were equivocal as to whether staffing would be a consideration.<sup>97</sup> In another district,<sup>98</sup> interviewees emphasized the need for proper staffing – both having someone on staff who knows how to configure the system for use by self-represented litigants and having adequate personnel to do quality control.

III. Alternative (non-CM/ECF) modes of electronic access

A number of these districts provide alternative methods of access for self-represented litigants – both for filing their own papers and for receiving others’ filings in the case. As to those districts, we had a set of questions for the interviewees. The districts (in our interview set) that provide alternative electronic filing access<sup>99</sup> are:

97 D. Kan. (one interviewee first advised, “make sure you have the manpower to handle what might be a huge influx,” but then stated that self-represented access to CM/ECF “does not seem like that big of a deal”; a second interviewee noted that their district had not seen a flood of self-represented litigants on CM/ECF and predicted that a court won’t necessarily have to increase its staffing but instead should just make sure its existing staff are trained and prepared).

98 W.D. Pa.

99 I am omitting the D.D.C. from this list, because although the court accepted email filings in civil cases during COVID, it no longer does so (though it is still accepting email filings in criminal cases).

For similar reasons, I am omitting the District of South Carolina. The D.S.C. permitted pro se email submissions during COVID, but ended that program in June 2021. The interviewee from the D.S.C. explained that few litigants were using it, and those who were using it made some frivolous filings, so this mode of access was being used “improperly or not much.”

I am also omitting the Western District of Pennsylvania, which allows certain sealed filings to be submitted by email, but does not otherwise allow alternative means of electronic submission.

- Northern District of Illinois (upload via Box.com; court previously had a temporary email address for pro se filings)
- District of Kansas (email)
- Western District of Missouri (upload) (interviewee estimates that around 50 self-represented litigants are using the EDSS system, up from half that number the previous year)<sup>100</sup>
- Southern District of New York (email, including to start a new case)
- District of Utah (email; interviewee stated that probably 70 percent of non-incarcerated self-represented litigants are filing by email)

The districts (in the interview set) that provide an electronic noticing program<sup>101</sup> are:

- District of Arizona
- District of the District of Columbia
- Northern District of Illinois
- District of Kansas (an interviewee reported that this is “more popular than electronic filing”)
- Western District of Missouri (only if the litigant signs up for EDSS)
- Southern District of New York
- District of Utah

The interviewees from districts that permit email or portal submissions did not report any significant difficulties with virus scanning,<sup>102</sup> file size,<sup>103</sup> or other technical problems.

As noted above in the section concerning CM/ECF access, the key benefit of electronic

101 In the W.D. Pa., there is no formal electronic-noticing program separate from CM/ECF, but self-represented litigants may register for CM/ECF but continue filing by paper if they wish.

102 A D.D.C. interviewee expressed confidence in the fact that the court’s IT department keeps their virus protections up to date.

A District of Kansas interviewee noted that court personnel will send any questionable-looking file to their IT department for review, but also noted that they knew of no malicious submissions; “the biggest problem is that they’ll scan in something you can barely read.”

A Western District of Missouri interviewee reported that the court’s IT department set up the court’s security system, which the interviewee presumes addresses any virus issues.

The Southern District of New York interviewee stated that, nationwide, the AO has provided all districts with a version of Outlook that blocks attachments that appear malicious.

The District of Utah interviewee stated that viruses have not been a concern.

submission methods, from the clerk’s office perspective,<sup>104</sup> is the avoidance of the need to handle paper filings.<sup>105</sup> Some interviewees also noted the benefit of an electronic trail concerning what was filed and when.<sup>106</sup> And one interviewee noted that unlike paper filings scanned by the court, some electronic submissions are native PDF files that are text searchable.<sup>107</sup>

Our interviewees did not note many difficulties or burdens associated with their programs. An interviewee in one district reported that occasionally a litigant will email the court a complaint without including contact info besides their email.<sup>108</sup> In another district, the interviewee noted one problematic litigant with seven cases before the court who was abusive in interactions with court staff, but that situation was handled by the judge and was “a rarity” because most EDSS users “file on time and properly and do well.”<sup>109</sup> The interviewee in another district stated that there is “a love/hate relationship” with the court’s email filing program: on one hand, some email submissions are crazy and abusive, but on the other hand, abuse can be submitted via paper as well, and with email submissions, the court avoids the need to deal with paper filings.<sup>110</sup> In another district the interviewee noted that the main challenges were making sure that a litigant submitted the required form to register for email filing<sup>111</sup> and that litigants sometimes make improperly formatted or too-frequent submissions; but this interviewee reported that most self-represented email filers do well, and that it is faster to deal with electronic submissions than paper submissions.

In districts that provide an alternative electronic submission method (email or portal), we asked whether such filings qualified for the same time-computation treatment as CM/ECF filings – that is, would a filing submitted at 11:30 pm on Tuesday be counted as filed on Tuesday? The 104 As with CM/ECF, so too here, some personnel also noted benefits to the litigant. E.g., W.D. Mo. (interviewee stated that access to the EDSS system gives litigant greater control over their case).

105 N.D. Ill. (avoidance of need to scan paper filing, audit scanned e-copy, retain paper copy for a period of time); D. Kan. (avoidance of need to scan paper filing); W.D. Mo. (same).

106 N.D. Ill. (contrasting this with the disputes that can arise with respect to what a litigant filed via a physical drop box).

answer in all five districts is yes.<sup>112</sup>

In the districts that provide an electronic noticing program, the electronic noticing programs all work the same basic way: The system is set to generate an email notice of electronic filing (NEF) to those litigants who are enrolled in the electronic noticing program just as it generates a NEF to those litigants who are on CM/ECF. So the electronic noticing works similarly for its enrollees as for CM/ECF participants: the email notice includes a link to the underlying filing (whether it be a litigant's filing or a court order)<sup>113</sup> and the person gets "one free look" by which to view and download the document (after that one free look, any applicable PACER fees would be incurred by subsequent "looks").

Our interviewees noted a few minor issues with their court's electronic noticing system: the need to alert litigants to its limitations,<sup>114</sup> the occasional user who messes up their "one free look,"<sup>115</sup> the occasional typo in an email address or change in email address.<sup>116</sup> They tended to stress the benefit to the court of avoiding the need to mail court orders<sup>117</sup> as well as having an electronic record of what the litigant received.<sup>118</sup> A number of interviewees observed that their court encourages self-represented litigants to sign up for electronic noticing.<sup>119</sup>

In at least one instance, we also obtained details on how electronic noticing works for 113 N.D. Ill.; D. Kan.; W.D. Mo.; S.D.N.Y.; D. Utah.

An interviewee from D.D.C. pointed out an exception to this: the documents cannot be accessed electronically in Social Security or immigration cases. (This may be specific to the way in which the email noticing program is set up. Compare Civil Rule 5.2(c)(1) (presumptively allowing "remote electronic access to any part of the case file" for "the parties and their attorneys" in Social Security and immigration cases).

114 A D.D.C. interviewee stressed the need to make sure that litigants understand the lack of electronic access to documents in Social Security and immigration cases.

115 D.D.C. (interviewee noted that the court will generate a new NEF for the person so long as it's not always the same person having this difficulty). Compare D. Kan. (interviewee noted that this issue arises much more frequently with attorneys than with self-represented litigants).

116 N.D. Ill. (interviewee noted that this problem arises "more frequently with attorneys" than with self-represented litigants); D. Utah (interviewee noted the need to keep the email addresses up to date and monitor for bouncebacks).

117 D. Kan. (interviewee noted that for many self-represented litigants, their email address may be more stable over time than their physical address); S.D.N.Y. ## MEMORANDUM

DATE: August 24, 2023

TO: Judge John D. Bates
Standing Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure
Reporters and Advisory Committee Chairs

CC: H. Thomas Byron III

FROM: Judge Jay S. Bybee

RE: E-Filing Deadlines Joint Subcommittee

We write on behalf of the E-Filing Deadlines Joint Subcommittee to summarize the Subcommittee's recommendations concerning Suggestion Nos. 19-AP-E, 19-BK-H, 19-CR-C, and 19-CV-U. Those docket numbers refer to a 2019 proposal by now-Chief Judge Michael Chagares that the national time-counting rules<sup>1</sup> be amended to set a presumptive electronic-filing deadline earlier than midnight.<sup>2</sup>

---

1 Civil Rule 6(a)(4) is representative of the operative portions of the national time-counting rules. It provides in relevant part:

(a) Computing Time. The following rules apply in computing any time period specified in these rules, in any local rule or court order, or in any statute that does not specify a method of computing time....

(4) "Last Day" Defined. Unless a different time is set by a statute, local rule, or court order, the last day ends:

(A) for electronic filing, at midnight in the court's time zone; and

(B) for filing by other means, when the clerk's office is scheduled to close.

Bankruptcy Rule 9006(a)(4) and Criminal Rule 45(a)(4) are materially similar. Appellate Rule 26(a)(4) is slightly more complicated (in part because it addresses electronic filings in both the district court and the court of appeals) but, like the other three rules, it sets a presumptive deadline of midnight for electronic filings.

2 Chief Judge Chagares summarized his proposal thus:

The subcommittee requested information from the Federal Judicial Center (“FJC”) about actual filing patterns by time of day. The FJC released two studies in 2022 – one concerning e-filing in federal court,<sup>3</sup> and another concerning e-filing in state courts.<sup>4</sup> The study of federal-court filings included a survey component, but that survey was truncated due to challenges arising from the pandemic.<sup>5</sup> The study also included a quantitative analysis of more than 47 million docket entries made in 2018 in the federal bankruptcy courts, district courts, and courts of appeals. That analysis enabled the researchers to reach this estimate: “About four out of five attorney filings in all three types of courts were made between 8:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m. About one in fifty was made before 8:00, about one in six was made after 5:00, and about one in ten was made after 6:00.”<sup>6</sup>

This year, the Third Circuit adopted (effective July 1, 2023) a new local rule that moves the presumptive deadline for most electronic filings in that court of appeals from midnight to 5:00 p.m.<sup>7</sup> The Standing Committee asked the subcommittee to update its consideration of the

I respectfully propose that a study be conducted by the Advisory Committees on the Appellate, Bankruptcy, Civil, and Criminal rules as to whether the rules should be amended to roll back the current midnight electronic filing deadline to an earlier time in the day, such as when the clerk’s office closes in the respective court’s time zone. The prospects of improved attorney and staff quality of life, convenience to judges, and fairness underlie this proposal.

26.1 Deadline for Filing

(a) Unless a different time is set by a statute, local rule, or court order:

(1) documents received by the Clerk by 5:00 p.m. Eastern Time on the last day for filing will be considered timely filed;

(2) documents received after 5:00 p.m. Eastern Time on the last day for filing will be considered untimely filed; and

2019 proposal in the light of that development.

The subcommittee met by Zoom on August 21, 2023. All members participated, as did the Rules Committee Secretary and reporters from all four of the relevant advisory committees. Subcommittee members gave consideration to the Third Circuit's stated reasons for its new local rule, and also to reported comments concerning that local rule. It was noted that the local rule proposal had evoked strong negative reactions from the bar. An internal DOJ survey of attorneys concerning the idea of moving the presumptive e-filing deadline earlier than midnight had also elicited negative comments about that idea. A subcommittee member reported a similar reaction from members of a law firm.

After careful discussion, the subcommittee voted unanimously to recommend that no action be taken on Suggestion Nos. 19-AP-E, 19-BK-H, 19-CR-C, and 19-CV-U, and that the subcommittee be disbanded.<sup>8</sup>

(3) for documents filed electronically, the filer must complete the transaction by 5:00 p.m. Eastern Time on the last day for filing for the filing to be considered timely.

(b) L.A.R. 26.1 applies to documents filed after the initiation of a proceeding in the court of appeals. It does not apply to documents that initiate an appeal or other proceeding in the court of appeals.

(c) Pursuant to L.A.R. 31.1(b)(1) and L.A.R. Misc. 113, registered ECF filers must file briefs and appendices electronically and the deadline established in L.A.R. 26.1(a) applies. The deadline established in L.A.R. 26.1(a) does not apply to the submission of briefs and appendices, if:

(1) a party is not a registered ECF filer and is permitted to file non-electronic briefs and appendices in accordance with Fed. R. App. P. 25(a)(2)(A)(ii); or

(2) a party is providing paper copies of previously filed electronic briefs and appendices.

(d) The deadline established in L.A.R. 26.1(a) does not apply to documents filed by inmates in accordance with Fed. R. App. P. 25(a)(2)(A)(iii).

The Third Circuit's Public Notice dated May 2, 2023 is enclosed.

<sup>8</sup> It was noted that the Appellate Rules Committee currently has before it a suggestion from Howard Bashman, Esq., proposing various possible responses by the Appellate Rules Committee to the Third Circuit's local rule. See Suggestion 23-AP-F. The Appellate Rules Committee, however, has not yet discussed that proposal, which remains for future consideration by that advisory committee.

RE: Proposal – Study Regarding Rolling Back the Electronic Filing Deadline from Midnight

I respectfully propose that a study be conducted by the Advisory Committees on the Appellate, Bankruptcy, Civil, and Criminal rules as to whether the rules should be amended to roll back the current midnight electronic filing deadline to an earlier time in the day, such as when the clerk’s office closes in the respective court’s time zone. The prospects of improved attorney and staff quality of life, convenience to judges, and fairness underlie this proposal.

Background

Electronic filing has many advantages, including flexibility, convenience, and cost savings. The advent of electronic filing led to the Appellate, Bankruptcy, Civil, and Criminal rules to be amended to include the following definition affecting the filing deadline:

“Last Day” Defined. Unless a different time is set by a statute, local rule, or court order, the last day ends:

(A) for electronic filing, at midnight in the court’s time zone; and

(B) for filing by other means, when the clerk’s office is scheduled to close.

Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9006(a)(4); Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(a)(4); Fed. R. Crim. P. 45(a)(4). See Fed. R. App. P. 26(a)(4) (incorporating the identical language). As a result, the rules provide for two distinct filing deadlines that depend upon whether the filing is accomplished electronically or not.

Reasons Driving the Proposal for a Study

Under the current rules, the virtual courthouse is generally open each day until midnight. As a consequence, attorneys, paralegals, and staff frequently work until midnight to complete and file briefs and other documents. This is in stark contrast to the former practice and procedure, where hard copies of filings had to arrive at the clerk’s office before the door closed, which was (and is) in the late afternoon.

It may be that the midnight deadline has negatively impacted the quality of life of many, taking these people away from their families and friends as well as from valuable non-legal pursuits. Working until midnight to finalize and file papers may result in greater profits for some, and just extra working hours for others. The same may be said of the opposition, who may be waiting for those papers to appear on the docket. But can or should the rules of procedure encourage a better quality of life for people involved in representing others (or themselves)? These are vexing questions worthy of consideration in my view.

As you know, I have been considering this proposal for some time. Only this past weekend I learned that the United States District Court for the District of Delaware in 2014 and the Supreme Court of Delaware in July 2018 rolled their electronic deadlines back — the District Court until 6:00 p.m. and the Supreme Court until 5:00 p.m. Notably, the Supreme Court of Delaware adopted the recommendations of a Delaware Bar report titled Shaping Delaware's Competitive Edge: A Report to the Delaware Judiciary on Improving the Quality of Lawyering in Delaware (the “Delaware Bar Report”) and found at:

<https://courts.delaware.gov/forms/download.aspx?id=105958>. The Delaware Bar Report memorialized a careful study of members of the Delaware bar and may be instructive in considering my proposal. It focused largely on attorney and staff quality of life, observing for instance that “[w]hen it is simply the result of the human tendency to delay until any deadline, especially on the part of those who do not bear the worst consequences of delay [that is, people who are not “more junior lawyers and support staff”], what can result is a dispiriting and unnecessary requirement for litigators and support staff to routinely be in the office late at night to file papers that could have been filed during the business day.” Delaware Bar Report 26-27. Accordingly, studying the effects of an earlier filing deadline on attorney (especially younger attorney) and staff quality of life would seem to be a worthwhile endeavor.

Another reason for a study is that it may shed light on the impact of late-night filings on the courts and the possible benefits of an earlier electronic filing deadline to judges. For instance, many District Judges and Magistrate Judges receive an email after midnight each night that provide them notice of docket activities (NDAs) or notice of electronic filings (NEFs) in their cases from the preceding day. NDAs or NEFs received after midnight may not do judges a lot of good. It may be that an earlier filing deadline would allow judges the opportunity to scan the electronic filings to determine whether any matters require immediate action.

Still another reason for the study involves fairness. This raises a couple of concerns. Maintaining a level playing field for advocates and parties is one concern. For example, pro se litigants are not permitted in some jurisdictions (or may be unable to use) the electronic filing system. Electronic filers may then be afforded the advantage of many more hours than their pro se counterparts to prepare and file papers. Another example involves large law firms that have night staffs versus small law firms and solo practitioners that might be forced to bear the expense of overtime or find new personnel to assist on a late-night filing. A second concern involves the possibility of adversaries “sandbagging” each other with unnecessary late-night filings to deprive each other from hours (perhaps until the morning) that could be used to formulate a response to such filings. Indeed, the Delaware Bar Report noted “[s]everal lawyers admitted to us that when counsel . . . had filed briefs against them at midnight that they had responded by ‘holding’ briefs for filing until midnight themselves as a response, even when their brief was done.” Delaware Bar Report 33-34.<sup>1</sup>

A study should also thoroughly consider the potential problems that might be associated with an earlier electronic filing deadline. These problems may include how attorneys who are occupied in court or at a deposition during the day and attorneys working with counsel in other time zones are supposed to draft and file their papers timely if they do not have until midnight. Further, a criticism addressed by the Delaware Bar was that an earlier deadline “will not change the practice of law, which is a 24-hour job, and it will result in more work on the previous day.” Delaware Bar Report 25.

Like other potential changes to the status quo, the notion of rolling back the time in which an advocate may electronically file will certainly be opposed by many in the bar. Indeed, the Delaware Bar Report recounts that the large majority of attorneys polled did not support changing the time to file electronically. Groups that did support the change (at least informally), however, were the Delaware Women Chancery Lawyers and the Delaware State Bar Association’s Women and the Law Section. Delaware Bar Report 17, 18. In addition, the United States District Court for the District of Delaware — a pilot district of sorts — has four and one-half years of experience with its earlier deadline for electronic filing. I spoke with Chief Judge Leonard Stark, who confirmed that the attorneys in that district appear to be satisfied with the earlier electronic filing deadline, and that the judges in that district have received no complaints about the deadline. See Delaware Bar Report 10 (quoting the statement of the Delaware Chapter of the Federal Bar Association president that the District Court order rolling back the electronic filing deadline “has provided a healthier work-life balance” and that the order “has been well received and we have heard positive feedback from clients, Delaware counsel, and counsel from across the country.”). A study may well consider the Delaware experience.

Sketches of a Rule Change

If the deadline for electronic filing is rolled back, what time would be appropriate? I do not propose a specific time, but I do suggest this would be an area to study if the committees are inclined to consider changes. The Delaware Bar Report, relying upon local daycare closing times, recommended a 5:00 p.m. deadline, and that deadline was adopted by the Delaware Supreme Court. Delaware Bar Report 32. If a time-specific approach was embraced in the federal rules, then the current <(A) for electronic filing, at midnight in the court’s time zone> could be changed to <(A) for electronic filing, at ___ p.m. in the court’s time zone>. Another approach that has the benefit of simplicity is setting a uniform time for all filings. So, under that approach, the rules could be changed to something such as:

---

<sup>1</sup> The Delaware Bar Report also concluded that an earlier deadline would improve the quality of electronic court filings. Delaware Bar Report 32-33, 39-40. Reasons proffered for this conclusion include that late evening electronic filing “does not promote the submission of carefully considered and edited filings,” id. at 32, and that quality “is improved when lawyers can bring to their professional duties the freshness of body, mind, and spirit that a fulfilling personal and family life enable,” id. at 39-40.

“Last Day” Defined. Unless a different time is set by a statute, local rule, or court order, the last day ends, for either electronic filing or for filing by other means, when the clerk’s office is scheduled to close.

This sketch incorporates most of the language of the current rules. Note that both sketches retain the important language that leaves open the possibility that an alternate deadline may be set by statute, local rule, or court order. Of course, the above sketches are merely for possible discussion and there are certainly other options. Committee notes, if a change is made, might include the acknowledgment that the amendment would not affect the deadlines to file initial pleadings or notices of appeal.

Thank you for considering this proposal. As always, I will be pleased to assist the rules committees in any way.

Public Notice – May 2, 2023

The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has adopted amendments to its Local Appellate Rules (L.A.R.), creating a new L.A.R. 26.1 and modifying L.A.R. Misc. 113.3(c). The amended rules create a uniform 5:00 p.m. E.T. deadline for filings (electronic and otherwise) and will become effective on July 1, 2023. The Clerk’s Office will apply the 5:00 p.m. E.T. deadline to deadlines set on or after July 1, 2023, and also observe a grace period until December 31, 2023, for papers mistakenly filed after 5:00 p.m. E.T. The amendments are below.

By way of background, Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure 25(a) and 26(a) create two general presumptive filing deadlines, with electronically filed documents due at midnight and documents filed otherwise (such as paper filings) due when the Clerk’s Office closes. The hours of the Clerk’s Office in the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit are 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. E.T.

Rule 26(a)(4) also authorizes courts to establish their own deadlines by court order or local rule. The Court consulted its Lawyers Advisory Committee, which studied and approved the proposed rule changes. The Court then determined that it would solicit comments from the public about the proposed new local rule and conforming amendment. A Public Notice encouraging comments was issued on January 17, 2023. The period for public comment closed on March 3, 2023.

The Court received wide variety of comments from a diverse group of entities and people, including senior attorneys, junior attorneys, pro se litigants, professors, paralegals, and legal assistants. “The Court is grateful for all of the comments received and they were quite helpful in our decision-making. As a matter of fact, several modifications to the proposed rules were made because of suggestions made in the comments, such as excepting filings initiating cases in the Court, like petitions for review,” stated Chief Judge Michael A. Chagares. Further, the Court took notice of the successes of the United States District Court for the District of Delaware and state courts of Delaware, which relied principally on work/life balance and quality of life concerns in similarly modifying their filing deadlines years ago. Other courts have also rolled back their deadlines.

Reasons supporting the Court’s adoption of the amendments include, in no particular order:

- permitting the Court’s Helpdesk personnel to assist electronic filers with technical and other issues when needed during regular business hours and permitting other Clerk’s Office personnel to extend current deadlines (the average non-extended filing period is thirty days) in response to a party’s motion or for up to fourteen days by telephone, during regular business hours. In addition, the amendments permit judges to read and consider filings at an earlier hour.
- insofar as over half of the Court’s litigants are pro se, many of whom cannot or will not use the Court’s CM/ECF system (and attorneys must use the system), the rule largely equalizes the filing deadlines for pro se litigants and attorneys.
- consistent with the collegiality and fairness the Court encourages, the rule ends the practice by some of unnecessary late-night filings intended to deprive opponents from hours that could be used to consider and formulate responses to such filings. Further, the rule obviates the need by opposing counsel to check whether opposing papers were filed throughout the night. About one-quarter of the Court’s filings are currently received after business hours.
- alleviating confusion by equalizing the filing deadlines for electronically filed and non-electronically filed documents in most cases.

While the new rule sets a 5:00 p.m. E.T. deadline for filing, parties reserve the autonomy to prepare their papers whenever they choose, and as Chief Judge Chagares notes, “the virtual courthouse remains open twenty-four hours a day for electronic filing.”

The Clerk’s Office will proactively advise and remind parties of the new deadline in, for instance, scheduling orders.

L.A.R. 26.0                    COMPUTING AND EXTENDING TIME

26.1    Deadline for Filing

- (a) Unless a different time is set by a statute, local rule, or court order:
  - (1) documents received by the Clerk by 5:00 p.m. Eastern Time on the last day for filing will be considered timely filed;
  - (2) documents received after 5:00 p.m. Eastern Time on the last day for filing will be considered untimely filed; and
  - (3) for documents filed electronically, the filer must complete the transaction by 5:00 p.m. Eastern Time on the last day for filing for the filing to be considered timely.

- (b) L.A.R. 26.1 applies to documents filed after the initiation of a proceeding in the court of appeals. It does not apply to documents that initiate an appeal or other proceeding in the court of appeals.
- (c) Pursuant to L.A.R. 31.1(b)(1) and L.A.R. Misc. 113, registered ECF filers must file briefs and appendices electronically and the deadline established in L.A.R. 26.1(a) applies. The deadline established in L.A.R. 26.1(a) does not apply to the submission of briefs and appendices, if:
  - (1) a party is not a registered ECF filer and is permitted to file non-electronic briefs and appendices in accordance with Fed. R. App. P. 25(a)(2)(A)(ii); or
  - (2) a party is providing paper copies of previously filed electronic briefs and appendices.
- (d) The deadline established in L.A.R. 26.1(a) does not apply to documents filed by inmates in accordance with Fed. R. App. P. 25(a)(2)(A)(iii).

Comments: Fed. R. This rule applies “[u]nless a different time is set by statute, local rule, or court order.” L.A.R. 26.1 relies upon this authority.

MEMORANDUM

TO: ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON BANKRUPTCY RULES

FROM: TECHNOLOGY AND PRIVACY SUBCOMMITTEE

SUBJECT: 23-BK-C– RULES 9014 AND 9017 AND PROPOSED RULE 7043 ON REMOTE HEARINGS

DATE: AUG. 16, 2023

The National Bankruptcy Conference (NBC) has submitted proposals to amend Bankruptcy Rules 9014 and 9017 and introduce a new Rule 7043 to facilitate video conference hearings for contested matters in bankruptcy cases.

Currently, Rule 9017 makes applicable to bankruptcy cases the Federal Rules of Evidence<sup>1</sup> and Fed. R. Civ. P. 43 (Taking Testimony), 44 (Proving an Official Record) and 44.1 (Determining Foreign Law). Fed. R. Civ. P. 43(a) provides as follows:

(a) IN OPEN COURT. At trial, the witnesses' testimony must be taken in open court unless a federal statute, the Federal Rules of Evidence, these rules, or other rules adopted by the Supreme Court provide otherwise. For good cause in compelling circumstances and with appropriate safeguards, the court may permit testimony in open court by contemporaneous transmission from the different location.

Fed. R. Bank. P. 5001(b) requires, in part, that “[a]ll trials and hearings shall be conducted in open court<sup>2</sup> and so far as convenient in a regular court room.” The Rule was adapted from Fed. R. Civ. P. 77(b), which states, in part, that “[e]very trial on the merits must be conducted in open court, and, so far as convenient, in a regular courtroom.” The proposal by the NBC would not modify the requirements of Rule 5001(b).

The NBC proposes to eliminate the incorporation of Fed. R. Civ. P. 43 by reference in Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9017, so that it would no longer be applicable “in a bankruptcy case.”<sup>3</sup> With the deletion of the reference to Civil Rule 43, Rule 9017 would read as follows:

<sup>1</sup> Fed. R. Evid. 611(a), one of the Federal Rules of Evidence made applicable to bankruptcy cases under Bankruptcy Rule 9017, states that “[t]he court should exercise reasonable control over the mode and order of examining witnesses and presenting evidence so as to: (1) make those procedures effective for determining the truth; (2) avoid wasting time; and (3) protect witnesses from harassment or undue embarrassment.” The NBC views the broad discretion conferred by Fed. R. Evid. 611(a) as setting out a standard that is “inconsistent” with Fed. R. Civ. P. 43(a). In fact, Rule 611 does not directly address remote testimony, while Civil Rule 43(a) does so.

Rule 9017. Evidence<sup>4</sup>

The Federal Rules of Evidence and Fed. R. Civ. P. ~~43~~, 44, and 44.1 apply in a bankruptcy case.

Advisory Committee Note

The Rule is amended to delete the reference to Fed. R. Civ. P. 43. Under new Rule 7043, Fed. R. Civ. P. 43 is applicable to advisory proceedings but not to contested matters. Testimony in contested matters is governed by Rule 9014(d).

Instead, the NBC suggests a new Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7043 which would read as follows<sup>5</sup>:

Rule 7043. Taking Testimony

Fed. R. Civ. P. 43 applies in adversary proceedings.

Advisory Committee Note

Rule 7043 is new and continues to make Fed. R. Civ. P. 43 applicable to adversary proceedings—as was previously true under Rule 9017—but not to contested matters.

For contested matters, the NBC proposes to amend Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014(d). That Rule currently reads as follows:<sup>6</sup>

Rule 9014. Contested Matters

***

(d) Taking Testimony on a Disputed Factual Issue. A witness's testimony on a disputed material factual issue must be taken in the same manner as testimony in an adversary proceeding.

The NBC proposes that the Rule should be amended as follows:

Rule 9014. Contested Matters

***

(d) Taking Testimony on a Disputed Factual Issue; Evidence; Interpreters. Rule 43(d) F.R.Civ. P. applies in contested matters. A witness's testimony on a disputed material factual issue must be taken ~~in the same manner~~

as testimony in an adversary proceeding, in open court unless a federal statute, the Federal Rules of Evidence, these rules, or other rules adopted by the Supreme Court provide otherwise. For good cause and with appropriate safeguards, the court may permit testimony in open court by contemporaneous transmission from a different location. When a contested matter relies on facts outside the record, the court may hear the matter on affidavits or may hear it wholly or partly on oral testimony or on depositions.

The language of the proposed insertion is identical to Civil Rule 43 with the exception that the “compelling circumstances” standard is removed. To be consistent with the restyling project,<sup>7</sup> the amended rule should read as follows:

Rule 9014. Contested Matters

***

(d) Taking Testimony on a Disputed Factual Issue; Evidence; Interpreter.

(1) Taking Testimony. A witness’s testimony on a disputed material factual issue must be taken in the same manner as testimony in an adversary proceeding in open court unless a federal statute, the Federal Rules of Evidence, these rules, or other rules adopted by the Supreme Court provide otherwise. For cause and with appropriate safeguards, the court may permit testimony in open court by contemporaneous transmission from a different location.

(2) Evidence on a Motion. When a motion in a contested matter relies on facts outside the record, the court may hear the motion on affidavits or may hear it wholly or partly on oral testimony or on depositions.

(3) Providing an Interpreter. Fed. R. Civ. P. 43(d) applies in a contested matter.

Advisory Committee Note

Rule 9014(d) is amended to include language from Fed. R. Civ. P. 43. That rule is no longer generally applicable in a bankruptcy case and the reference to that rule has been removed from Rule 9017. Instead, Rule 9014(d) incorporates most of the language of Fed. R. Civ. P. 43 for contested matters, but eliminates the “compelling circumstances” standard in Fed. R. Civ. P. 43(a) for permitting remote testimony. Under new Rule 7043, all of Fed. R. Civ. P. 43—

<sup>7</sup> Note that the restyled Bankruptcy Rules never use the term “good cause” so the second sentence in (d)(1) uses the term “cause” despite the inconsistency with Civil Rule 43(a).

including the “compelling circumstances” standard—continues to apply to adversary proceedings.

Remote hearings have become commonplace in bankruptcy practice since the COVID-19 pandemic, and were justified during that period by “compelling circumstances.” But bankruptcy courts have recognized that there are many advantages to remote hearings, including to the debtors. As the NBC suggestion notes, “[r]emote transmission of court hearings removes a barrier to access for individual debtors who are unable to travel to the federal courthouse because the travel expense, parking expense, childcare needs, lack of job leave, and no public transportation make live attendance not possible.” Remote hearings also, as the NBC points out, “allow creditors who are often spread out across the country to participate in hearings when live attendance would be cost prohibitive.”

Unlike adversary proceedings, which are comparable to civil actions governed by Fed. R. Civ. P. 43, contested matters are often of very short duration and do not typically turn on the credibility of witnesses. Therefore, the concerns about the inability to confront witnesses in person are much less pressing for bankruptcy contested matters. The proposed amendments and new rule would retain the general rule that testimony in a contested matter will be in person, but give the court more discretion to permit remote testimony by setting a less stringent standard for allowing exceptions to the rule.

1080 13. Random Case Assignment – 23-CV-U

1081 Submission 23-CV-U, from the Brennan Center for Justice of New York University School 1082 of Law, urges the adoption of a Civil Rule to “establish a minimum floor for the randomization of 1083 judicial assignment within districts for certain civil cases.”

1084 This topic is included in the agenda for discussion by the Committee of whether or how 1085 such an objective could be achieved by rule amendment. There is no question that the topic is 1086 important. The Chief Justice stressed the importance of random assignment of cases in his 2021
1087 Year-End Report on the Federal Judiciary. On July 10, 2023, 19 Senators wrote Judge Rosenberg 1088 about “judge shopping” that appeared to occur in some judicial districts in which “plaintiffs can 1089 effectively choose the judge who will hear their cases due to local court rules governing how 1090 matters are assigned.” In other districts, the letter observed, “local rules require cases to be assigned 1091 randomly among all of the judges serving in the district.” A copy of that letter is included in this 1092 agenda book.

1093 In August 2023, the American Bar Association adopted its Resolution 521 (also included 1094 in this agenda book) as follows:

1095 RESOLVED, That the American Bar Association urges federal courts to eliminate 1096 case assignment mechanisms that predictably assign cases to a single United States
1097 District Judge without random assignment when such cases seek to enjoin or 1098 mandate the enforcement of a state or federal law or regulation and where any party,
1099 including intervenor(s), in such a case objects to the initial, non-random assignment 1100 within a reasonable time; and

1101 FURTHER RESOLVED, That the American Bar Association urges that, in such 1102 situations, case assignments are made randomly and on a district-wide rather than 1103 a division-wide basis.

1104 To a notable extent, this set of concerns relate to another issue that has appropriately
1105 received considerable attention recently – “nationwide injunctions” issued by a single district
1106 judge affecting governmental activities across the entire nation. See, e.g., Amanda Frost & Samuel 1107 Bray, Are Nationwide Injunctions Legal?, 102 Judicature 70 (2018); Alan Morrison, It’s Time to 1108 Enact a 3-Judge Court Law for National Injunctions, Bloomberg Law News, Feb. 6, 2023. Both 1109 the House and Senate Judiciary Committees have held hearings on this set of issues.

1110 A starting point is 28 U.S.C. § 137(a), which provides:

1111 The business of a court having more than one judge shall be divided among the 1112 judges as provided by the rules and orders of the court.

1113 The chief judge of the district court shall be responsible for the observance of such 1114 rules and orders, and shall divide the business and assign the cases so far as such 1115 rules and orders do not otherwise prescribe.

1116 If the district judges in any district are unable to agree upon the adoption of rules
1117 or orders for that purpose the judicial council of the circuit shall make the necessary 1118 orders.

1119 An initial reaction might be that this statute does not prescribe any role for the Civil Rules
1120 regarding the assignment of cases. Instead, the statute contemplates that the matter is governed by 1121 the district court, subject to action by the circuit judicial council if there is an impasse among the 1122 judges in a district.

1123 Somewhat similarly, statutory provisions contain considerable detail about the divisions of 1124 district courts. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 81-131. For example, § 81(a) provides that the Northern District 1125 of Alabama comprises seven divisions, which the statute defines by county.

1126 It appears that the local rules of a number of districts employ local “venue” provisions that 1127 allocate cases among divisions, and that some divisions may have only one or two active district 1128 judges. Before 1988, the relevant federal statute evidently required that cases be filed in the 1129 division where the defendant resided, but that was repealed in 1988. See ABA Resolution 521 at 1130 5-6 (“In 1988, Congress repealed that statutory provision, abolishing divisional venue at the federal 1131 level.”).

1132 This statutory overlay need not entirely foreclose the Committee’s ability to change
1133 existing practices by rule. The Enabling Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b) provides that, although rules
1134 “shall not abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right,” “[a]ll laws in conflict with such rules 1135 shall be of no further force or effect after such rules have taken effect.” This provision was 1136 originally included in the Enabling Act in 1934 because procedural provisions were sprinkled 1137 throughout the federal codes, and there were concerns that some of them might be overlooked and 1138 advanced as nullifying the new set of Civil Rules. That purpose has little current force, and the 1139 supersession power should be employed, if at all, with great caution. (And it might be worth noting,
1140 as Professor Burbank has emphasized, that when the Enabling Act was adopted in 1934 the 1141 “substantive rights” limitation probably did not apply to state law provisions, since the Erie case 1142 was not decided until 1938.)

1143 Accordingly, though this submission presents an important set of issues, it is not clear that 1144 a rulemaking response would be a desirable way to proceed to address them.

1145 For purposes of discussion, however, it seems useful to identify some concerns. No doubt 1146 Committee discussion will identify more:

1147 Importance of local district-court flexibility: Until now (subject to review by circuit judicial 1148 councils) the district courts have been in charge of their own case assignment practices. The 1149 submission itself says that districts have adopted “a wide variety of methods to allocate cases
1150 among judges.” It seems they vary from district to district, and that even a “minimum floor for the 1151 randomization of judicial assignment,” as proposed, could intrude in significant, and perhaps 1152 unfortunate, ways. For example, in geographically large districts having cases assigned to judges
1153 in a given division may serve valuable purposes. Insisting that jurors, lawyers, and judges travel 1154 long distances to attend court proceedings may be undesirable.

1155 It is also worth noting that the question of case assignment has evolved over time. Until 1156 the 1960s, many districts employed a “master calendar” system rather than individual assignment
1157 of cases for all purposes. Now individual assignment of cases is the norm, and perhaps universal.
1158 But individual assignment could be seen as a source of the problem complained of. See Judith 1159 Resnik, Managerial Judges, 96 Harv. L. Rev. 374, 378 (1982) (reporting on a major change in the 1160 judicial role – “Today, federal district judges are assigned a case at the time of its filing and assume 1161 responsibility for shepherding the case to completion.”).

1162 As the submission also notes, the Northern District of California uses random assignment 1163 for patent, trademark, and copyright cases and securities class actions. One prompt there might be 1164 that judges in the San Jose Division (next to Silicon Valley) might bear a very disproportionate 1165 portion of the district’s workload were all cases by or against Silicon Valley companies assigned 1166 to that division. That might be an example of circumstances in a district that call for a particular 1167 approach to case assignment. Section 137 leaves it to districts to attend to such needs, and perhaps 1168 a nationally uniform provision could unduly hamstring local latitude.

1169 Defining the affected cases: The submission does not seek to supersede local district court
1170 assignment practices in all cases, but only in a few. It offers the following possible description of 1171 those cases:

1172 In cases where a plaintiff seeks injunctive or declaratory relief that may extend 1173 beyond the district in which the case is filed, districts shall use a random or blind 1174 assignment procedure to assign the case among judges in that district.

1175 As an alternative, it also offers the following narrower definition:

1176 Cases where 1) the plaintiff is seeking injunctive relief that would extend outside 1177 the district; and 2) at least one of the plaintiffs is a governmental entity or official,
1178 resides outside the division, or is a member organization that includes members 1179 residing outside the division.

1180 The submission also conveyed the ABA definition of the cases that present this problem – “when 1181 a plaintiff seeks to enjoin a federal or state law or agency action.”

1182 It should be clear that these definitions would include a lot of cases. For any multi-district 1183 state, any action seeking injunctive or declaratory relief against the state would extend beyond the 1184 district. For example, a class action in California on behalf of a class of prisoners in state prisons
1185 would potentially apply state-wide in a state with four districts. In the same vein, a labor union is 1186 a “member organization,” and many unions include members outside the district. Similarly, some 1187 employment discrimination class actions would seem to be covered by the definition. Class 1188 certification in Wal-Mart v. Dukes was overturned by the Supreme Court, but the case would seem 1189 to fit the first definition above.

1190 Applying the definition of affected cases: Presumably case assignment (by random means)
1191 is handled efficiently by clerks’ offices and does not require judicial input. If some cases must be 1192 assigned in a special way rather than in the manner used for most cases, somebody will have to 1193 decide whether given filings should be subject to a different assignment procedure. Is that decision
1194 to be made by the court clerk? Alternatively, is the chief judge to make the determination? With 1195 electronic filing, that might not be logistically difficult, but it could be an additional complication.

1196 Perhaps the civil cover sheet should include a question that would identify a case as falling within 1197 the category of concern. But if we are dealing with plaintiff forum shopping it may be that some 1198 plaintiffs will be reluctant to identify their cases in this manner.

1199 Rule-based “venue” provision?: The submission objects that cases seeking nationwide
1200 relief may be filed in divisions “that bear little connection” to the facts or issues of the case. Of 1201 course, the general venue statute controls where cases may be filed; is this case-assignment
1202 approach an additional “venue” directive? As the ABA materials show, in 1988 Congress
1203 abolished “divisional venue.” Is this a step back in that direction? Should a rule require that cases 1204 be filed only in districts with a “substantial” connection to the facts or issues in the case?

1205 Have measures short of rule amendments been effective?: The submission notes the issue
1206 raised with the Committee by Senators Tillis and Leahy regarding assignment of patent 1207 infringement cases (22-CV-Q). As it notes, the district whose practices were drawn into question 1208 by the senators revised its case assignment practices for patent cases to deal with the problem.
1209 Perhaps the problem in the patent infringement cases was of a different dimension, but the 1210 comparison does raise this question.

1211 Of concern only to the Civil Rules?: This submission is only about assignment of civil 1212 cases. But it is worth asking whether case assignment in other federal courts might be considered.
1213 For example, some bankruptcy proceedings have broad implications. Consider, for example, the 1214 Purdue Pharma matter now pending before the Supreme Court. The automatic stay in bankruptcy 1215 may often, as in the opioids instance, have broad effect across many districts (and in state courts 1216 as well). Perhaps assignment of such “blockbuster” bankruptcy matters should be done on a 1217 random basis in districts with multiple bankruptcy judges.

1218 Applicable to magistrate judge assignments under § 636(c)?: Of course, assignment to a 1219 magistrate judge of full authority to decide a case under § 636(c) depends on party consent. But 1220 on occasion that consent may be conditioned on the identity of the magistrate judge. Whether or 1221 not such a conditional consent should be honored, the possibility does suggest another potential 1222 implication of this submission.

1223 * * * * *

1224 A new Rule 83(a)(3) might prescribe case assignment requirements with regard to certain 1225 cases. Perhaps one might say this is not a transsubstantive rule because it’s only about one category 1226 of cases. Though defining that category may be difficult, the transsubstantivity concern might not 1227 loom large. It’s worth noting, for example, that Rule 5.1 already prescribes special treatment for 1228 cases making a constitutional challenge to a statute, and that Rule 24(b)(2) has provisions about 1229 intervention by a government officer or agency in litigation involving statutes or orders emanating 1230 from that officer or agency. It may be that the sort of cases that prompt this submission raise similar 1231 concerns, though with regard to case assignment rather than notice to a governmental body or 1232 intervention by that governmental body.

1233 Surely many other issues will be raised, but the foregoing at least suggests some.

Submission of a Proposal to Adopt a Rule to Increase the Randomness of Civil Case Assignments

Dear Secretary Byron:

Please find enclosed a Proposal requesting that the Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure adopt a rule that would establish a minimum floor for the randomization of judicial assignment within districts in certain civil cases. The Proposal details one potential approach for the Committee's consideration: if a plaintiff seeks injunctive relief that would extend beyond a judicial district, the case would be randomly assigned to any judge within the district, regardless of the division in which the case was filed. The Committee might also consider additional potential criteria for requiring randomization, as discussed in the Proposal.

Random case assignment protects the impartiality and public legitimacy of the judiciary. This is especially important where parties seek broad injunctive relief that will affect numerous others not before the court. Currently, there are a number of divisions in the country where, pursuant to local rules, all cases filed in the counties of a division are assigned to a small handful of judges, and often a single judge. Litigants in a range of high-profile cases have filed in such divisions with the aim of securing a judge they believe will favor their claims.

This judge-shopping has damaged public confidence in the fairness of the judicial system, at a time when the judiciary is already under intense scrutiny. A new Federal Rule of Civil Procedure is needed to ensure uniform minimum standards for random case assignment. Adopting such a change through rulemaking would permit thoughtful consideration of the different values and institutional needs implicated by judicial case assignment procedures. An effective response from the judiciary itself to the problem of judge-shopping would promote public confidence in judicial impartiality.

Professor Amanda Shanor and the Brennan Center for Justice are the Proponents and respectfully request that they be notified when the Committee considers this matter in open session. For the convenience of the Committee, all communications can be directed to the undersigned at shanor@wharton.upenn.edu.

BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON RULES OF PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE
PROPOSAL TO REQUIRE RANDOM JUDICIAL ASSIGNMENT FOR CERTAIN CASES

Professor Amanda Shanor and the Brennan Center for Justice (the Proponents) respectfully request that the Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure consider and then adopt a Rule under which certain cases would be randomly assigned to any judge of the district in which the case was filed.

Introduction & Rationale for the Proposal

Currently, the judges in each federal judicial district have discretion to devise a system for case assignment within their district. Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 137, titled Division of business among district judges, “[t]he business of a court having more than one judge shall be divided among the judges as provided by the rules and orders of the court.” Rule 83 on Local Rules then sets the procedures under which case assignment systems can be adopted. For instance, it provides that “[a]fter giving public notice and an opportunity for comment, a district court, acting by a majority of its district judges, may adopt and amend rules governing its practice” and that “[c]opies of rules and amendments must, on their adoption, be furnished to the judicial council and the Administrative Office of the United States Courts and be made available to the public.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 83.

Districts have adopted a wide variety of methods to allocate cases among judges.<sup>1</sup> In some places, districts assign all cases filed within a division with a relatively low volume of cases to only one or two judges. Geographically-tied assignment rules are a valuable tool for preserving access to justice in less populous areas and for ensuring that “litigants are served by federal judges tied to their communities.”<sup>2</sup> However, they were not meant to enable plaintiffs to hand-pick their judges, let alone in cases with significant nationwide implications.

However, they have led to just that result. In recent years, plaintiffs have exploited case assignment procedures to seek nationwide relief from one or two judges in divisions that bear little connection to the facts of their case, in what has widely been perceived to be an effort to choose a judge who favors their

<sup>1</sup> For a policy that mostly relies on random selection, but within limits so that certain districts are not overburdened, see General Order No. 21-01 at 9-15 (C.D. Cal. 2021), <https://www.cacd.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/general-orders/GO%2021-01.pdf>. For an example of a policy of random assignment in the context of one courthouse, see D.D.C. For a geographically large district split into many divisions that assigns all of its judges to all of its divisions and randomly divides all cases between all of them, regardless of where filed, see General Order No. 12 (N.D.N.Y. 2020), <https://www.nynd.uscourts.gov/sites/nynd/files/general-ordes/GO12.pdf> (“Civil cases shall be assigned blindly and at random by the Clerk”). The Western District of Missouri uses a similar approach W.D. Mo. viewpoint.<sup>3</sup> This includes cases where the issues being litigated, and even the parties, have no particular connection to that division.<sup>4</sup> In recent years, parties have filed a remarkable volume of cases seeking, and obtaining, nationwide relief in single-judge divisions. Indeed, a small number of judges in single-judge divisions have issued nationwide injunctions against a range of federal policies related to immigration,<sup>5</sup> abortion,<sup>6</sup> contraception,<sup>7</sup> gun regulation,<sup>8</sup> employment law,<sup>9</sup> and educational policy.<sup>10</sup>

This situation has damaged public confidence in the fairness of the judicial system and prompted widespread demands for change. The American Bar Association, for example, recently adopted a resolution urging the federal courts to “eliminate case assignment mechanisms that predictably assign cases to a single United States District Judge” in cases seeking injunctions against federal or state law where any party objects to the initial assignment within a reasonable time period.<sup>11</sup> Those cases, the ABA proposes, would then be randomly assigned among all of the district judges.<sup>12</sup> Nineteen Senators recently called on the Judicial Conference to recommend rules to all district courts that would ameliorate judges shopping.<sup>13</sup> And Senate Majority Leader, Chuck Schumer, has called on the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Texas, which has assignment rules<sup>14</sup> that have been frequently exploited, to adopt random case assignment.<sup>15</sup> In short, as the Congressional Research Service has noted, “[i]n recent years, some observers have expressed concerns that litigants challenging government actions were filing suit in those divisions [where only one or two active federal judges are assigned] in an attempt to judge shop.”<sup>16</sup> These concerns have correctly identified a fundamental problem; a new Rule is needed to establish uniform minimum standards for random case assignment.

The process for adopting new Federal Rules provided in the Rules Enabling Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2072, and elaborated through the Judicial Conference, is a preferable method for dealing with this issue for several reasons. This process would allow both a systematic approach to and public comment on the administrative practicalities and multiple values implicated by case assignment procedures. As the Supreme Court has recognized, rulemaking “draws on the collective experience of bench and bar, and it facilitates the adoption of measured, practical solutions.”<sup>17</sup> It is also flexible: the rules committees are “left wholly free to approach the question of amendment of . . . the rules in the light of whatever considerations seem relevant to them,”<sup>18</sup> and are not constrained by the “time pressures and piecemeal character of case-by-case adjudication”<sup>19</sup> or other similar limitations. For this reason, this Committee can more comprehensively study and weigh the issues raised by judge shopping and case assignment processes.

A Rule would also establish not only a uniform but also, critically, a clear policy. All litigants then could both be assured that their case had been assigned in accordance with a minimum floor of randomness and have a clear Rule to cite if there was any question as to the processes of their case assignment. Adopting a Rule that ensures minimum standards for the random assignment of cases would thus promote both the legitimacy and impartiality of the judiciary—fostering public confidence.

Proposal

The Judicial Conference is empowered under 28 U.S.C. § 2072 “to prescribe general rules of practice and procedure and rules of evidence for cases in the United States district courts (including proceedings before magistrate judges thereof) and courts of appeals.” Pursuant to this authority, similar to Rule 83, the Conference should adopt a rule that creates a minimum procedural floor for the impartiality of case assignment. Districts would continue to have the flexibility, beyond that minimum, to adopt local rules to best divide business among district judges based on local conditions.

There are multiple ways to ensure cases are randomly assigned in circumstances when the risks of judge-shopping exceed the importance of having a case resolved locally by a judge with local community ties. Proponents offer one, relatively simple approach for the Committee’s consideration. Specifically, Proponents ask that this Committee promulgate the following rule or its equivalent:

- In cases where a plaintiff seeks injunctive or declaratory relief that may extend beyond the district in which the case is filed, districts shall use a random or blind assignment procedure to assign the case among the judges in that district.

If the Committee determines that requiring random assignment for a narrower category of cases would strike a better balance between preventing judge-shopping and preserving the benefits of single-judge divisions, it could require random assignment only for cases where 1) the plaintiff is seeking injunctive relief that would extend outside the district; AND 2) at least one of the plaintiffs is a governmental entity or official, resides outside the division, or is a member organization that includes members residing outside the division. Alternatively, it could require random assignment when a plaintiff seeks to enjoin a federal or state law or agency action, as the ABA recently recommended.<sup>20</sup>

This Proposal, like other similar proposals for randomization, accords with the Conference’s longstanding support for random case assignment, recently reaffirmed by Chief Justice Roberts, who observed that “the Judicial Conference has long supported the random assignment of cases and fostered the role of district judges as generalists capable of handling the full range of legal issues.”<sup>21</sup> The proposal also responds to widespread and bipartisan concerns about judge-shopping.<sup>22</sup> It does so in a balanced way that preserves single-judge judicial assignments in cases where they better serve the interests of access to justice or where a judge’s community ties might be germane to the issues at stake.

Similar limits on single-judge assignment have already proved workable in other contexts. Most recently, in response to judge-shopping concerns in patent cases filed in Waco, Texas, and after Chief Justice Roberts had referred the issue to the Conference for study,<sup>23</sup> the Western District of Texas revised its rules to require the random assignment of patent cases among the twelve judges in the district regardless of where the case is filed.<sup>24</sup> Other districts have put similar measures in place.<sup>25</sup> The Northern District of California uses random assignment for patent, trademark, and copyright cases, securities class actions, prisoner petitions, and capital habeas corpus cases.<sup>26</sup> The District of Nebraska does so when the United States is the plaintiff or the State of Nebraska, its agencies, or employees are the defendants, as well as for prisoner and pro se plaintiffs and social security cases.<sup>27</sup> The District of Montana largely does so for election-related cases.<sup>28</sup> The District of Maine does so where the state is a plaintiff or defendant.<sup>29</sup> And both the Northern District of New York and the Western District of Missouri—both large districts divided into many divisions—assign all of their judges to all of their divisions and randomly divide all cases between all of them, regardless of where filed.<sup>30</sup>

While these individual district rules vary, they all reflect and seek to reinforce the widely-shared values of fairness and impartiality. These values merit uniform protection throughout the federal judiciary. This Proposal would take a critical step in that direction by preventing the exploitation of case assignment rules by plaintiffs seeking geographically broad injunctive relief.

The Honorable Robin L. Rosenberg
Chair, Advisory Committee on Civil Rules
Judicial Conference
One Columbus Circle, NE
Washington, D.C. 20544

Dear Chair Rosenberg:

We write to you today about the issue of judge shopping. Specifically, in some federal judicial districts, plaintiffs can effectively choose the judge who will hear their cases due to local court rules governing how matters are assigned. In other districts, local rules require cases to be assigned randomly among all of the judges serving in the district. As a result, based on geography, some plaintiffs are able to guarantee that their claims will be heard before a specific judge whereas others are left to chance, and this inconsistency undermines Americans' faith in our judicial system. Congress requires the Judicial Conference to submit "recommendations to the various courts to promote uniformity of management procedures...of court business."<sup>1</sup> We urge you to provide applicable recommendations to every district court in order to address this problem and restore fairness to our federal judiciary.

One notable example of this issue occurs in the Northern District of Texas. Even though the Northern District has twelve active judges and another four senior judges who still hear cases, the relevant special order<sup>2</sup> provides that civil cases filed in many divisions are always assigned to a single judge, or to one of just a few: cases filed in the Amarillo Division are always assigned to Judge Kacsmayk; cases filed in the Wichita Falls Division are always assigned to Judge O'Connor; cases filed in the Abilene, Lubbock, and San Angelo Divisions are split between just two judges; and cases filed in the Fort Worth Division are split between three. Consequently, plaintiffs can effectively choose the exact judge (or set of a few judges) who will hear their cases by choosing the courthouse in which they sue. The State of Texas itself has sued the Biden Administration at least 31 times in Texas federal district courts, but it has not filed even one of those cases in Austin, where the Texas Attorney General's office is located. Instead, Texas has always sued in divisions where case-assignment procedures ensure that a particular preferred judge or one of a handful of preferred judges will hear the case. That includes the Northern District's Amarillo Division, where Texas has filed seven of its cases against the federal government. Many other litigants have done the same, including the Alliance Defending Freedom in its case challenging the FDA's approval of mifepristone.

Nothing requires any district to let plaintiffs choose their judges like this. Federal law splits many districts into two or more divisions, but these are geographical only. We acknowledge that there may be good-faith reasons for districts to assign judges to specific divisions. Such splits may reduce travel times for judges, jurors, criminal defendants, and other litigants by allowing cases to be tried locally. On the other hand, any logistical inconveniences must be balanced against unfairness in judicial process. Furthermore, with electronic filing, divisions need not affect judicial assignments at all. Some district courts with many divisions divide civil cases randomly between all their judges, regardless of where the case is filed. The Northern District of New York is—like the Northern District of Texas—a geographically large district split into many divisions. But the Northern District of New York assigns all of its judges to all of its divisions and randomly divides all cases between all of them, regardless of where the cases are filed.<sup>3</sup>

The Judicial Conference recently highlighted issues related to “judicial assignment and venue for patent cases in federal trial court,” and Chief Justice John Roberts affirmed the Conference’s support for “random assignment of cases.”<sup>4</sup> Shortly thereafter, the Western District of Texas changed its case-assignment rules for patent cases filed in Waco so that such cases are now randomly assigned between all eleven active judges in the district and one senior judge.<sup>5</sup> While this was a positive development, it is unclear why this principle should not apply to every district court for every area of the law.

Congress currently allows each district court to decide for itself how to assign cases.<sup>6</sup> This gives courts the flexibility to address individual circumstances in their districts and among their judges. But that flexibility is permitting litigants to hand-pick their preferred judges and effectively guarantee their preferred outcomes. Accordingly, the Judicial Conference should recommend rules to all district courts that would promote uniformity in the federal courts.

Additionally, as Congress considers whether new legislation is necessary to address this issue, we request responses to the following questions by Monday, July 24, 2023:

1. Which divisions across the nation have local rules that guarantee one district judge will hear all (or nearly all) cases filed in those divisions?
  - a. What considerations may justify such local rules?
2. What options are available to guarantee variability in the assignment of cases to district judges?
  - a. Through what mechanisms could such options be implemented?
3. How often does the Judicial Conference “submit suggestions and recommendations to the various courts to promote uniformity of management procedures and the expeditious conduct of court business,” as required by statute?
4. What other options should Congress consider to reduce judge shopping, both at the district-court level and circuit-court level?

REPORT

Introduction

Our federal courts are generally designed to assign district judges randomly to cases as they are filed, barring, e.g., a relationship to pending matters within the same district or relationship to a prior, concluded case. Chief Justice Roberts noted in the 2021 Year-End Report on the Federal Judiciary that “the Judicial Conference has long supported the random assignment of cases . . . .”<sup>1</sup> Random assignment serves important functions in preserving and promoting public confidence in the judiciary. It avoids the appearance that some litigants can literally “pick their judge” by, in some instances, filing within a particular division within a federal district; in some circumstances, the courthouse in which a case is filed leads to the sole judge who sits there routinely receiving assignments from filings made “at” that courthouse.<sup>2</sup>

This tactical version of “judge-shopping” by place-of-filing was highlighted by the practice of patent owners filing cases with nationwide impact in a single division (Waco) in the Western District of Texas, resulting in nearly 25% of patent cases nationally being assigned to the single judge in that division.<sup>3</sup> In 2021, Chief Justice Roberts addressed criticism of this practice, noting that “Senators from both sides of the aisle have expressed concern that case assignment procedures allowing the party filing a case to select a division of district court might, in effect, enable the plaintiff to select a particular judge to hear a case.”<sup>4</sup> Chief Justice Roberts was sufficiently concerned that he “asked the Director of the Administrative Office, who serves as Secretary of the Judicial Conference, to put the issue before the Conference,” noting further that the “Committee on Court Administration and Case Management is reviewing this matter and will report back to the full Conference.”<sup>5</sup> The Chief Judge for the Western District of Texas then issued case-assignment orders expressly directed at patent filings to prevent filings in Waco from leading to assignment to a particular judge.<sup>6</sup> In effect,

<sup>5</sup> Id. As of the first quarter of 2023, no “report back to the full Conference” has been released, perhaps due to the issuance of case assignment Orders in the Western District of Texas addressing the practice.

<sup>6</sup> Order Assigning the Business of the Court as It Relates to Patent Cases (W.D. Tex. July 25, 2022) (“[A]ll civil cases involving patents (Nature of Suit Codes 830 and 835), filed in the Waco Division on or after July 25, 2022, shall be randomly assigned to the following [twelve named] district judges of this Court until further order of the Court.”), as continued in Amended Order Assigning the Business of the Court, Item IX(c) (W.D. Tex. May 1, 2023), (“Patent cases will be assigned as ordered on July 25, 2022, in the

these orders confirmed Chief Justice Roberts’s stated belief “that self-governing bodies of judges from the front lines are in the best position to study and solve—and to work in partnership with Congress in the event change in the law is necessary.”<sup>7</sup>

Yet patent cases are not the only kind of case in which strategic, geographic filings have apparently been made to select a particular judge. As the Congressional Research Service noted in late 2022, “[i]n recent years, some observers have expressed concerns that litigants challenging government actions were filing suit in those divisions [where only one or two active federal judges are assigned] in an attempt to judge shop.”<sup>8</sup> For example, an amicus brief in the recent application in United States v. Texas and Louisiana examined nineteen instances in which the State of Texas had filed challenges to federal law in federal courts from in 2021 and 2022, and noted that eighteen of the nineteen cases had been assigned to a district judge appointed by a President of the opposite political party from the Administration promoting the federal law or policy being challenged. Of the eighteen cases, seven were filed in single-judge divisions, while another eight were filed in two-judge divisions.<sup>9</sup>

Of course, concern with “judge shopping” is nothing new and is not restricted to any particular political viewpoint or party or kind of case. This Report shows that concerns about “judge shopping” arise in many contexts or kinds of cases,<sup>10</sup> with the recent decision on the medication-abortion drug mifepristone in the single-judge Amarillo Division of the Northern District of Texas as a case in point.<sup>11</sup> While that case brought this issue once again to the forefront, the perception that a party can choose a <sup>10</sup> In addition to concerns about this practice in patent cases raised by the Chief Justice and cases like the mifepristone case brought in the Northern District of Texas, these concerns have arisen in bankruptcy cases, ERISA cases, among others. See, e.g., Adam J. Levitin, Judge Shopping in Chapter 11 Bankruptcy, 2023 U. Ill. L. preferred judge is problematic whether the practice is used to advance a conservative ideology or a liberal one, or whether it is used to gain advantage in patent cases or any other type of litigation. The organization of the courts and case-assignment should be fair, and should be seen as fair by all, and should not be used as a vehicle for advancing any kind of political agenda or financial or other result.

Blind, random selection of judges has long been thought to be critical to “prevent[] judge shopping by any party, thereby enhancing public confidence in the assignment process.”<sup>12</sup> If a party “attempted somehow to choose the judge whom she believed would be most favorable to her case, our judicial system would condemn this action because it impairs the integrity of the judicial system and judicial process.”<sup>13</sup>

Against this background, it is important that district courts protect what Chief Justice Roberts described as the “important” value of “the random assignment of cases.”<sup>14</sup> by assigning certain cases via district-wide, normal random case-assignment provisions (which may very well include the judge in the division in which the case was filed, but will not automatically result in assignment to that judge). The proposal is limited to cases seeking to enjoin national or state law or agency action (or mandate its enforcement in a particular way) such that the ruling would apply outside the division in which a case is filed—if not nationwide. When such a case is filed in a division in which it would be predictably assigned to a single district judge, including single-judge divisions that use the division in which a case is filed to make the case assignment, such predictable assignment would be circumvented if a party or intervenor promptly objects. Because this proposal is limited to cases challenging federal or state law or agency action beyond the division’s geographic limits, the interest in having “litigants . . . served by federal judges tied to their communities”<sup>15</sup> is not at issue. Because the process requires an objection, cases that fit the description but are otherwise viewed by all parties as appropriate for resolution before the one judge in that division (whether due to their familiarity with the local community or otherwise) would not be affected by this proposal. The proposal does not seek, as some commentators have suggested, to dismantle current single-judge divisions. It is important to note, also, that not all districts

Background Regarding Districts and Divisions

Of the ninety-four judicial districts within the federal system as of the first quarter of 2023, only two districts have only a single authorized judge—the District of Guam and the District of the Northern Mariana Islands.<sup>17</sup> Thus, in theory and barring recusals, no case filed in any other district court should automatically go to a particular judge due to a division being served by a single district judge.<sup>18</sup>

As of 2018, fifty-five of the ninety-four federal district courts have been divided into divisions by geography.<sup>19</sup> And as of 2018, at least thirty-five of those fifty-five divisions appear to have either a single district judge or two district judges assigned to each.<sup>20</sup>

Federal statutes leave case-assignment mechanisms to each district, with the judicial council of the appropriate circuit authorized to set procedures should the district court fail to do so.<sup>21</sup> Common factors applied within districts in setting their case-assignment mechanisms include: (i) preferences for maintaining a balance of case numbers before each active district judge, (ii) some distinction between civil and criminal matters, (iii) some distinctions based upon type of case as revealed by

<sup>17</sup> In addition, there is one district judge authorized for the Eastern District of Oklahoma plus (as of March 11, 1994) an additional authorized district judge who “roves” equally between the Northern and Eastern Districts of Oklahoma. A breakdown is available through the United States Courts website at <https://www.uscourts.gov/judges-judgeships/authorized-judgeships>,

<sup>20</sup> The United States Courts website does not publish information regarding one- or two-judge divisions. Botoman reported and tabulated the results of research indicating that identified thirty-five judicial divisions within which a single district judge hears greater than 50% of the cases, providing a logical proxy for one to two judge divisions. Id., app. A. While information was not available for all districts and divisions, the article’s Appendix A identified the following districts with one or more such divisions in U.S. District Courts for the following districts: District of Montana (with five such divisions), Western District of North Carolina (with four such divisions), Western District of Pennsylvania (with two such divisions), Eastern District of Texas (with five such divisions), Northern District of Texas (with two such divisions), Southern District of Texas (with two such divisions), Western District of Texas (with two such divisions), Western District of Virginia (with six such divisions), Northern District of West Virginia (with four such divisions), Southern District of West Virginia (with two such divisions), and Eastern District of Wisconsin (with one such division), for a total of thirty-five divisions spread across seven states within which one judge is assigned more than half the cases filed.

information contained on the Civil Cover Sheet<sup>22</sup> or similar documentation, and (iv) use of divisions in making assignments.<sup>23</sup>

Over the past several years the public perception has grown that high-profile cases with national impact are filed by repeat litigants in particular districts and divisions in order to be assigned to particular judges. As Chief Justice Roberts noted in his 2021 Year-End Report on the Federal Judiciary when addressing specifically the assignment of patent cases filed in a single-judge division:

Senators from both sides of the aisle have expressed concern that case assignment procedures allowing the party filing a case to select a division of a district court might, in effect, enable the plaintiff to select a particular judge to hear a case. Two important and sometimes competing values are at issue. First, the Judicial Conference has long supported the random assignment of cases and fostered the role of district judges as generalists capable of handling the full range of legal issues. But the Conference is also mindful that Congress has intentionally shaped the lower courts into districts and divisions codified by law so that litigants are served by federal judges tied to their communities. Reconciling these values is important to public confidence in the courts . . . .<sup>24</sup>

While the patent-case assignment situation was addressed by the district in which 25% of patent cases nationwide had been filed in a single-judge division<sup>25</sup> moving to a system where patent cases were to be assigned randomly throughout the district,<sup>26</sup> the ability to appear to “choose” a particular judge is (i) not limited to patent law, and (ii) not addressed in the internal Western District of Texas Assignment Order that sought to end the rush to select a single judge by filing in the Waco Division.<sup>27</sup>

Abolition of “Divisional Venue”

Prior to 1988, the presence of judicial divisions did not lead to the possibility of judge-shopping because, under the relevant federal statute, a party was generally required to file within the division where the defendant resided.<sup>28</sup> In 1988, Congress repealed that statutory provision, abolishing divisional venue at the federal level.<sup>29</sup> Now, following that repeal, divisional case-assignment rules run the gamut. Some districts make venue available only in one division. Other districts have established divisional rules largely tracking the rules for district-level venue, i.e., focusing upon where a defendant resides or where a substantial part of the events occurred that allegedly give rise to the claim; to still other courts that have elected not to establish any division-level rules, allowing any plaintiff to choose any division within the district.<sup>30</sup> Even those courts that allow filing in any division do not necessarily tie the case assignment of judges to the division in which a case was filed.<sup>31</sup> In short, a variety of approaches exist, with one approach—assignment to single-judge divisions—resulting in the perception that the value of “random assignment” is being overrun without any corresponding benefit resulting from a perceived tie to the specific judges’ assigned communities.<sup>32</sup>

The Impact of Single-Judge Divisions Can and Should Be Lessened or Eliminated

A. Case-Assignment Methods in Some Single-Judge Divisions Create an Appearance That Some Repeat Litigants Can Effectively Choose a Specific Judge, Unlike the Vast Majority of Litigants in Federal Court.

The experience of district courts throughout the system evidences a preference for initial random assignment to one or more judges. Chief Justice Roberts recognized this interest in his 2021 Year-End Report, stating that “the Judicial Conference has long supported the random assignment of cases and fostered the role of district judges as generalists capable of handling the full range of legal issues.”<sup>33</sup> Yet, as the patent-case assignment experience demonstrated, and as the pattern of filing cases with nationwide impact in particular one- and two-judge divisions has also shown,<sup>34</sup> the “random assignment of cases” can be circumvented, or seen to be avoided particularly in certain kinds of cases. This apparent avoidance, as the Chief Justice noted in 2021, has led to questioning and criticism from Congress and the public and press.<sup>35</sup> However, as

<sup>29</sup> Judicial Improvements and Access to Justice Act, Pub. L. No. 100-702, § 1001, 102 Stat. 4642, 4664 (1988) (“REPEAL.—Section 1393, relating to divisional venue in civil cases, and the item relating to section 1393 in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 87, are repealed.”).

<sup>34</sup> For example, the Vladeck Amicus Brief, supra note 9, discusses 19 instances in which the State of Texas has challenged federal policy in Texas federal courts, with 18 of the 19 cases resulting in assignment to judges appointed by the President of the same national political party. Seven of the cases were filed in single-judge divisions, while another eight were filed in two-judge divisions. Id., app. A.

<sup>35</sup> See, e.g., 2021 Year-End Report, supra note 1, at 5 (referencing “Senators from both sides of the aisle hav[ing] expressed concern that case assignment procedures allowing the party filing a case to select a division of a district court might, in effect, enable the plaintiff to select a particular judge to hear the case”); Perry Stein, The Justice Department’s Fight Against Judge Shopping In Texas, The Washington Post, discussed below, both the Courts themselves and the Congress each have toolkits that can be used to mitigate the perception of judge-shopping in these instances.

B. Multiple Alternative Approaches, if Taken by Courts, Can Avoid the Impact of Single-Judge Divisions.

The ABA Resolution does not call for the dismantling of any divisions or even of any divisions served by one judge. No new judges need to be added to any division, no court and chambers spaces need to be added in existing courthouses, and no new courthouses built. The Resolution seeks to avoid only the impact that non-random assignment brings.

District judges have the authority provided by 28 U.S.C. § 137(a) to craft and apply assignment systems within their districts, with judicial councils authorized to create assignment systems if the district judges do not agree. As with the patent-cases situation in the Waco Division of the Western District of Texas, “[t]his issue of judicial administration provides another good example of a matter that self-governing bodies of judges from the front lines are in the best position to study and solve—and to work in partnership with Congress in the event change in the law is necessary.”<sup>36</sup> In that instance, the chief judge of the district announced new case-assignment practices that returned cases to the wheel for random assignment across the district. Some other districts may take that same approach. Others may choose to eschew consideration of the division in which a qualifying case is filed for all assignment purposes. Other courts will find additional approaches to both allow the continuation of relatively small docket divisions that are geographically dispersed, so long as random assignment occurs for cases seeking to enjoin federal or state law or regulation.

Districts with single-judge divisions can address the issues through a variety of means, including assigning relevant cases in the first instance throughout the district to judges irrespective of the division in which the case is filed, or allowing a party or intervenor within a designated time after service to call for random assignment within the district.

C. Multiple Alternative Approaches by Congress Remain Available Should Courts Not Act to Restrict or Remove the Impact of Single-Judge Division Assignments.

This Resolution does not call for Congressional action. Yet commentators have noted several legislative approaches that could be taken, as the Chief Justice put it, “in the event change in the law is necessary.”<sup>37</sup>

For years, federal statutes required that such cases be resolved by three-judge courts. One legislative approach would address cases that have extra-divisional impact, or perhaps extra-district impact, and return to three-judge courts, when the validity of constitutionality of administrative rules or statutes are involved.<sup>38</sup>

A second legislative approach has suggested that the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia have exclusive jurisdiction over suits seeking an injunction against the enforcement of any federal law (including regulations and Executive orders).<sup>39</sup>

A third alternative legislative approach would simply prohibit single-judge divisions from being used for assignment purposes if any party objected within a designated number of days after service. In the event of objection, the case would randomly be assigned to a judge at the district level without regard to the division in which the case was filed. In effect, this would legislate what the proposal proposes courts consider.

This Resolution and Report does not endorse any of these proposals. However, the availability of Congressional action may, as the Chief Justice suggested, encourage action by the Judiciary.

Conclusion

Confidence in our judicial system is the bedrock of the rule of law. The system’s fairness, and perception of its fairness, is even more critical when addressing issues of legislative or executive power. This Resolution addresses efforts to pick not just a forum, but to pick a specific judge. Avoiding perceptions that parties can choose a judge to decide matters will help support the legitimacy of our federal courts and the public’s confidence in them.

1. Summary of Resolution(s).

The Resolution urges federal courts to use their existing statutory authority to avoid case assignment mechanisms in which cases are predictably assigned to a single United States District Judge without random assignment (e.g., due to the use of geographic divisions in assignment where a single judge is associated with a single division or for any other reason) in all such cases (i) seeking to enjoin or mandate the enforcement of a state or federal law or regulation, and (ii) where any party, including intervenor(s), objects to the initial, non-random assignment within a reasonable time; and, instead, in such cases make case assignments on a district-wide, rather than division-wide, random assignment basis.

The Resolution further urges that, in such situations, case assignments are made randomly be made on a district-wide rather than division-wide random assignment basis.

2. Indicate which of the ABA's Four goals the resolution seeks to advance (1-Serve our Members; 2-Improve our Profession; 3-Eliminate Bias and Enhance Diversity; 4-Advance the Rule of Law) and provide an explanation on how it accomplishes this.

The Resolution seeks to advance Goal 4- Advance the Rule of Law by helping to ensure that federal judges are assigned to cases randomly and to ensure public confidence in the United States courts by avoiding the appearance that parties can choose the judges who decide their cases.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

1. Summary of the Resolution

The Resolution urges federal courts to use their existing statutory authority to avoid case assignment mechanisms in which cases are predictably assigned to a single United States District Judge without random assignment (e.g., due to the use of geographic divisions in assignment where a single judge is associated with a single division or for any other reason) in all such cases (i) seeking to enjoin or mandate the enforcement of a state or federal law or regulation, and (ii) where any party, including intervenor(s), objects to the initial, non-random assignment within a reasonable time; and, instead, in such cases make case assignments on a district-wide, rather than division-wide, random assignment basis.

The Resolution further urges that, in such situations, case assignments are made randomly on a district-wide rather than division-wide basis.

2. Summary of the Issue that the Resolution Addresses

Cases in which plaintiffs seem to be able to pick a particular judge, as opposed to a particular forum, do disservice to the public perception of the judiciary and the litigation process. This can arise particularly when a judicial district has a division in which all cases are predictably assigned to a single judge and the district uses the division in which the case was filed as the basis for case assignment. Courts are not required to do so, and this Resolution urges federal to use their authority to avoid non-random assignment in single-judge divisions or otherwise in cases having clear extra-divisional impact.

3. Please Explain How the Proposed Policy Position will address the issue

The policy calls for federal courts to use their case assignment authority to assign based on the entire district, rather than only a division, in these instances.

4. Summary of Minority Views or Opposition Internal and/or External to the ABA Which Have Been Identified

The proposal to limit single judge, non-random assignments itself does not appear to be controversial per se. Some stakeholders may prefer to let the courts simply continue to deal with the issues on a district-by-district basis without any additional suggestions or guidance. Some stakeholders may prefer to provide guidance that more broadly limits single judge assignments in all cases and regardless of objection by the parties. The Resolution takes a middle ground, focusing on those cases that involve extra-divisional effects on enforcement of state or federal statutes or regulations where a party or intervenor objects.

521

On the other hand, some proponents of providing guidance would prefer to skip the “urge the courts” step reflected in the Resolution, and instead go straight to requesting legislative action. Consistent with Chief Justice Roberts’s statements when a similar issue surfaced in patent cases in a particular district, this Resolution calls on self-governing bodies of judges from the front lines to find appropriate, nuanced approaches to avoid the non-random assignments. Should non-random assignments continue, the situation may call for legislative action.

1234 14. Rule 60(b)(1) – 23-CV-D

1235 This matter comes to the Committee by way of the January 2023 meeting of the Standing 1236 Committee:

1237 At the January 2023 Standing Committee meeting, Judge Pratter suggested that the 1238 Civil Rules Committee consider whether there is a need to address the recent 1239 Supreme Court decision Kemp v. United States (2022). In that opinion, the Court
1240 held that a “mistake” under Civil Rules 60(b)(1) includes a judge’s error of law.

1241 Kemp v. United States, 142 S.Ct. 1856 (2022), involved a Rule 60(b) motion to reopen
1242 Kemp’s motion under § 2255 to vacate his 2011 sentence of 420 months after conviction for a 1243 variety of crimes. Kemp appealed his conviction, as did his co-defendants, and the Eleventh Circuit
1244 consolidated the appeals and affirmed the convictions in November 2013. Ordinarily such a 1245 judgment would become final when the 90 days to seek certiorari or rehearing expired, in February
1246 2014. Though Kemp did not seek rehearing of this affirmance or certiorari, two of his co-
1247 defendants did seek rehearing, which the Eleventh Circuit denied in May 2014.

1248 In April 2015, Kemp filed the § 2255 motion. The Government moved to dismiss on the 1249 ground that the motion was too late because the statute requires that the motion must be filed within 1250 one year from “the date on which the judgment becomes final.” The district court granted the 1251 Government’s motion, concluding that the judgment on Kemp’s appeal became final in February 1252 2014, 90 days after the panel ruling. Though his § 2255 motion was filed within one year of the 1253 Eleventh Circuit denial of his co-defendants’ motion for a rehearing, Kemp did not appeal the 1254 dismissal.

1255 Two years after the dismissal of the § 2255 motion, Kemp sought to reopen that action, 1256 relying on Rule 60(b)(6). He argued that even though he did not move for rehearing from the 1257 original affirmance of his conviction some of his co-defendants did, meaning that the final 1258 judgment was entered only when the rehearing petitions of those co-defendants were denied in 1259 May 2014, so that his April 2015 motion actually was timely. Kemp relied on the Supreme Court’s 1260 Rule 13.3, which prescribes that the 90-day clock to seek certiorari does not begin to run until all 1261 parties’ petitions for rehearing are denied.

1262 The district court rejected Kemp’s argument on the timeliness of his original § 2255
1263 motion, but also held that in any event his Rule 60(b) motion was untimely under the one-year
1264 limit in Rule 60(c)(1): “A motion under Rule 60(b) must be made within a reasonable time – and 1265 for reasons (1), (2), and (3) no more than a year after the entry of the judgment or order.”

1266 Kemp argued before the Eleventh Circuit that his motion was actually under Rule 60(b)(6)
1267 – “any other reason that justifies relief” – because it was premised about the district court’s legal 1268 error in determining whether his original § 2255 motion was timely. The Eleventh Circuit agreed
1269 that Kemp’s original § 2255 motion appeared to have been timely due to the petitions for rehearing
1270 filed by his co-defendants, but held that he was nevertheless barred by the one-year limit in Rule
1271 60(c)(1) since his motion was based on a “mistake.”

1272 Noting that there was a division among the circuits about whether Rule 60(b)(1) was 1273 available for relief due to an argument that the court erred as a matter of law, the Supreme Court

1274 granted cert. See 142 S.Ct. at 1861 n.1, saying that the Eighth and First Circuits had ruled that 1275 Rule 60(b)(1) does not apply in such circumstances, while the Seventh, Second, Sixth and Eleventh 1276 had ruled that it includes the court’s errors of law.

1277 By an 8-1 vote, the Court held that, in light of the “text, structure, and history of Rule
1278 60(b),” a judge’s errors of law are “mistakes” within the rule. It rejected Kemp’s reliance on Rule 1279 60(b)(6) because that is available only when Rules 60(b)(1) through 60(b)(5) are inapplicable, and 1280 60(b)(1) was applicable.

1281 Justice Sotomayor concurred in the Court’s opinion, but stressed her understanding that 1282 Rule 60(b)(6) might be available in “extraordinary circumstances, including a change in 1283 controlling law.” The Court recognized that “we do not decide whether a judicial decision
1284 rendered erroneous by subsequent legal or factual changes also qualifies as a ‘mistake’ under Rule 1285 60(b)(1).” See id. at 1862 n.2.

1286 Justice Gorsuch dissented on the ground that the Court should not have taken the case, and 1287 that the issue should instead have been addressed through the rules process because it “presents a 1288 policy question about the proper balance between finality and error correction.” He also stressed 1289 that the rule interpretation “matters only under rare circumstances”: “By petitioner’s own
1290 (uncontested) count, his is the first petition ever to present today’s question for this Court’s 1291 review.” Id. at 1865.

1292 The majority did not accept Justice Gorsuch’s urging that the matter be addressed by 1293 rulemaking, so the question going forward is whether this decision provides a ground for 1294 considering a change to Rule 60(b). As matters now stand, it seems that the Court has held that the 1295 interpretation of Rule 60(b)(1) previously employed by the Eighth and First Circuits was wrong, 1296 and that the interpretation of four other circuits was right.

1297 The main impact of the Court’s interpretation of Rule 60(b)(1) is to subject motions seeking 1298 relief from an order or judgment to the one-year time limitation in Rule 60(c)(1), which would not 1299 apply to a motion under Rule 60(b)(6). One concern might be that including legal errors among 1300 those within “mistake” under Rule 60(b)(1) would permit losing parties to sidestep the time limits 1301 on appealing by filing 60(b)(1) motions within a year. The Court addressed this issue in Kemp
1302 (142 S.Ct. at 1864):

1303 In any event, the alleged specter of litigation gamesmanship and strategic 1304 delay is overstated. Rule 60(b)(1) motions must be made “within a reasonable 1305 time.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(c)(1). And while we have no cause to define the 1306 “reasonable time” standard, we note that Courts of Appeals have used it to forestall 1307 abusive litigation by denying Rule 60(b)(1) motions alleging errors that should 1308 have been raised sooner (e.g., in a timely appeal). See, e.g., Mendez v. Republic
1309 Bank, 725 F.3d 651, 660 (CA7 2013).

1310 The Seventh Circuit’s Mendez decision (cited by the Court) held that, after a timely notice
1311 of appeal was filed in that case, the district court could entertain a Rule 60(b)(1) motion premised
1312 on an error that would lead to reversal unless corrected by the district court. It quoted Judge Henry 1313 Friendly: “no good purpose is served by requiring the parties to appeal to a higher court, often

1314 requiring remand for further trial proceedings, when the trial court is equally able to correct its 1315 decision in the light of new authority on application made within the time permitted for appeal.”
1316 Id. at 660, quoting Schildhaus v. Moe, 335 F.2d 529, 531 (2d Cir. 1964). It added (id.):

1317           To be clear, this conclusion does not undermine our effort to prevent Rule 60(b)
1318           from being used to evade the deadline to file a timely appeal. This concern may be 1319           adequately addressed through careful enforcement of the requirement that Rule
1320           60(b) relief be sought within a “reasonable time.” * * * [A] Rule 60(b) motion filed 1321           after the time to appeal has run that seeks to remedy errors that are correctable on 1322           appeal will typically not be filed within a reasonable time.

1323           The Seventh Circuit’s Mendez decision also stressed that “district courts are given broad 1324           discretion to deny motions for relief from judgment. Accordingly, we review the grant or denial 1325           of relief from judgment only for abuse of discretion.” Id. at 657-58.

1326           Under the circumstances, it does not appear likely that the Supreme Court’s Kemp decision
1327           (adopting what seems to have been the majority view of the courts of appeals) will cause significant 1328           problems. One response might be to revise Rule 60(b)(1) to exclude legal errors by the court as a
1329           ground for relief under the that provision, and thereby to bring them within 60(b)(6). How exactly
1330           to phrase such an exclusion might prove tricky. In Kemp, the Government urged that Rule
1331           60(b)(1)’s reference to “mistake” should be limited to “obvious errors,” but the Court declined to 1332           engage in “complex line-drawing.” 142 S.Ct. at 1863.

1333           It may be that later developments will show that the Court’s interpretation of Rule
1334           60(b)(1) has indeed caused problems, but it does not appear to create an immediate need for a 1335           rule amendment.

KEMP v. UNITED STATES*CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT

No. 21–5726. Argued April 19, 2022—Decided June 13, 2022

Petitioner Dexter Kemp and seven codefendants were convicted of various drug and gun crimes. The Eleventh Circuit consolidated their appeals and, in November 2013, affirmed their convictions and sentences. In April 2015, Kemp moved the District Court to vacate his sentence under 28 U. S. C. §2255. The District Court dismissed Kemp’s motion as untimely because it was not filed within one year of “the date on which [his] judgment of conviction [became] final.” §2255(f)(1). Kemp did not appeal. Then, in June 2018, Kemp sought to reopen his §2255 proceedings under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b), which authorizes a court to reopen a final judgment under certain enumerated circumstances. As relevant here, a party may seek relief within one year under Rule 60(b)(1) based on “mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect.” A party may also seek relief “within a reasonable time” under Rule 60(b)(6) for “any other reason that justifies relief,” but relief under Rule 60(b)(6) is available only when the other grounds for relief specified in Rules 60(b)(1)–(5) are inapplicable. Kemp’s motion to reopen his §2255 proceedings invoked Rule 60(b)(6), but his motion sought reopening based on a “mistake” covered by Rule 60(b)(1). Specifically, Kemp argued that the 1-year limitations period on his §2255 motion did not begin to run until his codefendants’ rehearing petitions were denied in May 2014, making his April 2015 motion timely. The Eleventh Circuit agreed with Kemp that his §2255 motion was timely but concluded that because Kemp alleged judicial mistake, his Rule 60(b) motion fell under Rule 60(b)(1), was subject to Rule 60(c)’s 1-year limitations period, and was therefore untimely.

Held: The term “mistake” in Rule 60(b)(1) includes a judge’s errors of law. Because Kemp’s motion alleged such a legal error, it was cognizable under Rule 60(b)(1) and untimely under Rule 60(c)’s 1-year limitations period. Pp. 3–10.

(a) As a matter of text, structure, and history, a “mistake” under Rule 60(b)(1) includes a judge’s errors of law. When the Rule was adopted in 1938 and revised in 1946, the word “mistake” applied to any “misconception,” “misunderstanding,” or “fault in opinion or judgment.” Webster’s New International Dictionary 1383. Likewise, in its legal usage, “mistake” included errors “of law or fact.” Black’s Law Dictionary 1195. Thus, regardless whether “mistake” in Rule 60(b)(1) carries its ordinary meaning or legal meaning, it includes a judge’s mistakes of law. Rule 60(b)(1)’s drafters could have used language to connote a narrower understanding of “mistake,” yet they chose not to qualify that term. Similarly, the Rule’s drafters could have excluded mistakes by judges from the Rule’s reach. In fact, the Rule used to read that way. When adopted in 1938, Rule 60(b) initially referred to “his”—i.e., a party’s—“mistake,” so judicial errors were not covered. The 1946 revision to the Rule deleted the word “his,” thereby removing any limitation on whose mistakes could qualify. Pp. 4–6.

(b) Neither the Government nor Kemp offers a reason to depart from this reading of Rule 60(b)(1). Pp. 6–10.

(1) The Government contends that the term “mistake” encompasses only so-called “obvious” legal errors. This contention—also held by several Courts of Appeals—is unconvincing. None of the dictionaries from the time the Rule was adopted and revised suggests this “obviousness” gloss. Nor does the text or history of Rule 60(b)(1) limit its reach only to flagrant cases that would have historically been corrected by courts sitting in equity. Finally, requiring courts to decide not only whether there was a mistake but also whether that mistake was sufficiently “obvious” raises questions of administrability. P. 6.

(2) Kemp’s arguments for limiting Rule 60(b)(1) to non-judicial, non-legal errors are also unconvincing. He claims that Rule 60(b)(1)’s other grounds for relief—“inadvertence,” “surprise,” and “excusable neglect”—involve exclusively non-legal, non-judicial errors, and thus “mistake” should be similarly limited. But courts have found that excusable neglect may involve legal error, see, e.g., Lenaghan v. Pepsico, Inc., 961 F. 2d 1250, 1254–1255, and they have a similar history of granting relief based on “judicial inadvertence,” Larson v. Heritage Square Assocs., 952 F. 2d 1533, 1536. Kemp argues that Rule 60’s structure favors interpreting the term “mistake” narrowly to include only non-legal errors, and the Court’s contrary interpretation would create confusing overlap between Rule 60(b)(1) and relief available under other parts of Rule 60 not subject to Rule 60(c)’s 1-year limitations period. But the overlap Kemp suggests would exist even if “mistake” reached only factual errors. Courts of Appeals have well-established tests for distinguishing between these Rules. And should such overlap ever create an irreconcilable conflict, courts may then resort to ordinary interpretive rules to determine which Rule to apply. As for Kemp’s worry that the Court’s interpretation would allow parties to evade other time limits by, for example, repackaging a tardy motion under Rule 59(e), the risk Kemp identifies would exist even under his own interpretation. And, in any event, the alleged specter of litigation gamesmanship and strategic delay is overstated because a Rule 60(b)(1) motion, like all Rule 60(b) motions, must be made “within a reasonable time.” Finally, Kemp protests that this Court’s reading is inconsistent with the history of Rule 60(b). But his argument is based on the mistaken notions that Rule 60(b)(1)’s list of grounds for reopening was understood to be a “term of art” when adopted, and that Rule 60(b)(6) alone was intended to afford relief for judicial legal errors that had previously been remedied by bills of review. Pp. 6–10.

Syllabus

DEXTER EARL KEMP, PETITIONER v.
UNITED STATES

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT

[June 13, 2022]

JUSTICE THOMAS delivered the opinion of the Court.

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b)(1) allows a party to seek relief from a final judgment based on, among other things, a “mistake.” The question presented is whether the term “mistake” includes a judge’s error of law. We conclude, based on the text, structure, and history of Rule 60(b), that a judge’s errors of law are indeed “mistake[s]” under Rule 60(b)(1).

I

In 2011, a federal jury convicted Dexter Kemp of various drug and gun crimes, and he was sentenced to 420 months in prison. Kemp, along with seven codefendants, appealed. The Eleventh Circuit consolidated their appeals and, in November 2013, affirmed their convictions and sentences. United States v. Gray, 544 Fed. Appx. 870. Kemp did not seek rehearing of the Eleventh Circuit’s judgment or petition this Court for certiorari. Two of Kemp’s codefendants did seek rehearing, which the Eleventh Circuit denied in May 2014.

In April 2015, Kemp moved the U. S. District Court for the Southern District of Florida to vacate his sentence under 28 U. S. C. §2255. The Government objected that Kemp’s §2255 motion was untimely. As relevant here, such motions must be filed within one year of “the date on which the judgment of conviction becomes final.” §2255(f)(1). For someone who, like Kemp, does not petition this Court for certiorari, a judgment becomes final when the time to seek certiorari expires—ordinarily, 90 days after judgment. See Clay v. United States, 537 U. S. 522, 525 (2003); this Court’s Rule 13.1. In this case, the District Court concluded that Kemp’s judgment became final in February 2014 (90 days after the Eleventh Circuit’s judgment affirming his conviction and sentence), making his April 2015 motion over two months late. The District Court dismissed Kemp’s motion in September 2016, and Kemp did not appeal.

Opinion of the Court

In June 2018—almost two years later—Kemp attempted to reopen his §2255 proceedings under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b), which authorizes a court to reopen a final judgment under certain enumerated circumstances. Rule 60(b)(1) permits a district court to reopen a judgment for “mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect,” so long as the motion is filed “within a reasonable time,” and, at most, one year after the entry of the order under review. See Fed. Rules Civ. Proc. 60(b)(1), (c)(1). Meanwhile, Rule 60(b)(6) permits reopening for “any other reason that justifies relief,” so long as the motion is filed “within a reasonable time.” Rule 60(c)(1).

Kemp invoked Rule 60(b)(6), but his motion arguably sought reopening based on a kind of “mistake” covered by Rule 60(b)(1). Specifically, Kemp argued that reopening was warranted because this Court’s Rule 13.3 prescribes that the 90-day clock to seek certiorari does not begin to run until all parties’ petitions for rehearing are denied, and the Eleventh Circuit denied his codefendants’ rehearing petitions in May 2014. Thus, according to Kemp, the 1-year period to file his §2255 motion began in August 2014, making his April 2015 motion timely.

The District Court rejected this timeliness argument and, in the alternative, held that Kemp’s Rule 60(b) motion was itself untimely. The Eleventh Circuit affirmed. 857 Fed. Appx. 573 (2021) (per curiam). While it agreed with Kemp that his original §2255 motion “appear[ed] to have been timely,” the Eleventh Circuit nonetheless concluded that he had filed his Rule 60(b) motion too late. Id., at 575–576. The Eleventh Circuit held that Kemp’s reopening motion alleged “precisely the sort of judicial mistak[e] in applying the relevant law that Rule 60(b)(1) encompasses,” and thus was subject to Rule 60(b)(1)’s 1-year limitations period. Id., at 576.

Kemp petitioned this Court for review, and we granted certiorari to resolve the Courts of Appeals’ longstanding disagreement whether “mistake” in Rule 60(b)(1) includes a judge’s errors of law.<sup>1</sup> 595 U. S. ____ (2022).

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b) permits “a party to seek relief from a final judgment, and request reopening of his case, under a limited set of circumstances.” Gonzalez v. Crosby, 545 U. S. 524, 528 (2005). Under Rule 60(b)(1), a party may seek relief based on “mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect.” Rules 60(b)(2) through (b)(5) supply other grounds for reopening a judgment. Finally, Rule 60(b)(6) provides a catchall for “any other reason that justifies relief.” This last option is available only when

Ford Motor Co.*, 734 F. 2d 463, 467 (CA1 1984) (same), with *Mendez v. ## Opinion of the Court

Rules 60(b)(1) through (b)(5) are inapplicable. See Liljeberg v. Health Services Acquisition Corp., 486 U. S. 847, 863, n. 11 (1988). Even then, “extraordinary circumstances” must justify reopening. Ibid.

Rule 60(c) imposes deadlines on Rule 60(b) motions. All must be filed “within a reasonable time.” Rule 60(c)(1). But for some, including motions under Rule 60(b)(1), that “reasonable time” may not exceed one year. Rule 60(c)(1). Motions under Rule 60(b)(6) are not subject to this additional 1-year constraint. Rule 60(c)(1).

Here, the parties dispute the extent to which a judge’s legal errors qualify as “mistake[s]” under Rule 60(b)(1). The Government contends that Rule 60(b)(1) applies any time a party alleges that a judge has made an “obvious” legal error—e.g., the “failure to apply unambiguous law to record facts.” Brief for United States 11. Kemp’s motion, the Government says, alleged an obvious legal error, so the Eleventh Circuit was correct to apply Rule 60(b)(1). According to Kemp, however, Rule 60(b)(1) applies only to factual errors made by someone other than the judge. Brief for Petitioner 3. So, in Kemp’s view, his motion challenging the District Court’s timeliness ruling was cognizable under Rule 60(b)(6), and the 1-year limit did not apply.

We ultimately disagree with Kemp and agree with the Government to a point. As a matter of text, structure, and history, the Government is correct that a “mistake” under Rule 60(b)(1) includes a judge’s errors of law. But we see no reason to limit Rule 60(b)(1) to “obvious” legal mistakes, as the Government proposes. We first explain why Rule 60(b)(1) covers all mistakes of law made by a judge, and then address why the Government’s and Kemp’s contrary interpretations of “mistake” do not persuade us.

The ordinary meaning of the term “mistake” in Rule 60(b)(1) includes a judge’s legal errors. When the Rule was adopted in 1938 and revised in 1946, the word “mistake” applied to any “misconception,” “misunderstanding,” or “fault in opinion or judgment.” Webster’s New International Dictionary 1383 (1914) (Webster’s); see also Funk & Wagnalls New Standard Dictionary of the English Language 1588 (1944) (Funk & Wagnalls) (defining “mistake” as an “error in action, judgment, or perceptions,” including, e.g., “a mistake in calculation”). In ordinary usage, then, a “mistake” was not limited only to factual “misconception[s]” or “misunderstanding[s],” or to mistakes by non-judicial actors. Webster’s 1383. Likewise, in its legal usage, “mistake” included errors “of law or fact.” Black’s Law Dictionary 1195 (3d ed. 1933) (Black’s). Thus, regardless whether “mistake” in Rule 60(b)(1) carries its ordinary meaning or legal meaning, it includes a judge’s mistakes of law.

Opinion of the Court

Had the drafters of Rule 60(b)(1) intended a narrower meaning, they “easily could have drafted language to that effect.” Mississippi ex rel. Hood v. AU Optronics Corp., 571 U. S. 161, 169 (2014). The difference between “mistake of fact” and “mistake of law” was well known at the time. Both lay and legal dictionaries identified them as distinct categories. See Funk & Wagnalls 1588; Black’s 1195. Thus, Rule 60(b)(1)’s drafters had at their disposal readily available language that could have connoted a narrower understanding of “mistake.” Yet they chose to include “mistake” unqualified.

Similarly, Rule 60(b)(1)’s drafters could just as easily have excluded mistakes by judges from the Rule’s ambit. In fact, the Rule used to read that way. When adopted in 1938, Rule 60(b) initially referred to “his”—i.e., a party’s—“mistake,” so judicial errors were not covered. Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 60(b) (1938). In 1946, however, the Rule’s amenders deleted the word “his,” thereby removing any limitation on whose mistakes could qualify. See Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 60(b)(1) (1946). Thus, as currently written, “mistake” in Both the Government's and Kemp's interpretations of Rule 60(b) depart from aspects of our reading. Their reasons for doing so are unavailing.

B

1

The Government contends that the term “mistake” encompasses only so-called “obvious” legal errors. Brief for United States 11. Several Courts of Appeals agree that Rule 60(b)(1) may be used to correct only “‘obvious errors’ of law, such as overlooking controlling statutes or case law.” In re Ta Chi Navigation (Panama) Corp. S. A., 728 F. 2d 699, 703 (CA5 1984). The Government argues that this limitation “has historical roots” because courts of equity traditionally “could grant relief from legal errors, but only ‘in the most unquestionable and flagrant cases.’” Brief for United States 18 (quoting Snell v. Insurance Co., 98 U. S. 85, 91 (1878)).

We are unconvinced. None of the English language or legal dictionaries noted above, supra, at 4–5, suggests this “obviousness” gloss. Nor does the Government tie the equity practice it invokes to the text or history of Rule 60(b). Finally, we question the administrability of a rule that requires courts to decide not only whether there was a “mistake” but also whether that mistake was sufficiently “obvious.” The text does not support—let alone require—that judges engage in this sort of complex line-drawing.

We are similarly unconvinced by Kemp's arguments for

---

<sup>2</sup>Here, Kemp alleged that the District Court erred by misapplying controlling law to record facts. In deciding that this alleged error is a “mistake,” we do not decide whether a judicial decision rendered erroneous by subsequent legal or factual changes also qualifies as a “mistake” under Rule 60(b)(1).

Opinion of the Court

limiting Rule 60(b)(1) to non-judicial, non-legal errors.

While Kemp does not dispute that “mistake” ordinarily would cover both legal and factual errors, he argues that the other grounds for relief in Rule 60(b)(1)—“inadvertence,” “surprise,” and “excusable neglect”—involve exclusively non-legal, non-judicial errors, and the word “mistake” should therefore be similarly limited. But courts have long found that excusable neglect may involve legal error. See, e.g., Lenaghan v. Pepsico, Inc., 961 F. 2d 1250, 1254–1255 (CA6 1992) (per curiam) (“understandable, albeit mistaken, reading of” a local rule); A. F. Dormeyer Co. v. M. J. Sales & Distribution Co., 461 F. 2d 40, 42–43 (CA7 1972) (misunderstanding of summons and relevant legal rules); Provident Security Life Ins. Co. v. Gorsuch, 323 F. 2d 839, 843 (CA9 1963) (erroneous understanding of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12). And they have a similar history of granting relief based on “judicial inadvertence.” Larson v. Heritage Square Assocs., 952 F. 2d 1533, 1536 (CA8 1992) (emphasis added); see also, e.g., O’Tell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 236 F. 2d 472, 475 (CA2 1956) (judge’s failure to deduct setoff in entering judgment was “inadvertence” under Rule 60(b)). Because the words surrounding “mistake” in Rule 60(b)(1) do not connote exclusively non-legal or non-judicial errors, they do not favor Kemp’s narrower reading.

Kemp also argues that Rule 60’s structure favors interpreting the term “mistake” narrowly. Our interpretation, he contends, would create confusing overlap between Rule 60(b)(1) and Rule 60(a), which authorizes a court to “correct a clerical mistake or a mistake arising from oversight or omission whenever one is found in a judgment, order, or other part of the record.” We disagree. Because Rule 60(a) covers a subset of “mistake[s]”—e.g., “clerical” ones—whereas Rule 60(b)(1) covers “mistake[s]” simpliciter, the overlap Kemp alleges would exist even if “mistake” reached only factual errors. And the Courts of Appeals have well-established rules for determining when Rule 60(a), rather than Rule 60(b), should apply. See, e.g., United States v. Griffin, 782 F. 2d 1393, 1397 (CA7 1986).

Opinion of the Court

Kemp alleges that our interpretation of Rule 60(b)(1) would create a similar problem with respect to Rules 60(b)(4) and (b)(5), which authorize relief from voided judgments and judgments that lack legal effect. Specifically, Kemp contends that a legal “mistake” could warrant relief under both Rule 60(b)(1) and Rule 60(b)(4) or Rule (b)(5), and a conflict could then arise given that the latter Rules are not subject to a 1-year time limit. But, again, that could occur even if only factual errors count as “mistake[s],” since factual errors, too, may justify relief under Rules 60(b)(4) and (b)(5). And, regardless, should this overlap ever create an irreconcilable conflict, courts may then resort to ordinary rules of statutory construction when selecting which provision would govern in a particular case. See, e.g., RadLAX Gateway Hotel, LLC v. Amalgamated Bank, 566 U. S. 639, 645 (2012) (“the specific governs the general”).

Kemp also worries that our interpretation would allow parties to evade other time limits set forth in the Federal Rules. For instance, Rule 59(e) motions to alter or amend a judgment must be filed within 28 days, and appeals must generally be filed within 30 days, see Fed. Rule App. Proc. 4(a)(1)(a). Kemp suggests that our interpretation would allow someone to repackage a tardy Rule 59(e) motion as a timely Rule 60(b)(1) motion, or to generate a right to an untimely appeal by filing a Rule 60(b)(1) motion and appealing once it is denied. We are unpersuaded because, yet again, the risk Kemp identifies would exist even under his own interpretation. For example, Kemp provides no explanation why, under his interpretation of Rule 60(b), parties could not repackage tardy Rule 59(e) motions based on legal errors as motions under Rule 60(b)(6), or recharacterize tardy motions based on factual errors as motions under Rule 60(b)(1). A denial in either case would then permit the litigant to appeal outside Appellate Rule 4's 30-day time limit.

In any event, the alleged specter of litigation gamesmanship and strategic delay is overstated. Rule 60(b)(1) motions, like all Rule 60(b) motions, must be made “within a reasonable time.” Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 60(c)(1). And while we have no cause to define the “reasonable time” standard here, we note that Courts of Appeals have used it to forestall abusive litigation by denying Rule 60(b)(1) motions alleging errors that should have been raised sooner (e.g., in a timely appeal). See, e.g., Mendez v. Republic Bank, 725 F. 3d 651, 660 (CA7 2013).

Nor, contrary to Kemp's protestations, is our interpretation inconsistent with the history of Rule 60(b). Kemp points out that Rule 60(b)(1) drew its text from existing state procedural rules. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Proc. Code §473 (Deering 1937). And he argues that its list of grounds for reopening—“mistake, inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect”—was understood when Rule 60(b) was adopted to be a “term of art” that excluded legal errors. Brief for Petitioner 10. But while some States interpreted their rules this way, see, e.g., Lucas v. North Carolina Mut. Life Ins. Co., 184 S. C. 119, 120, 191 S. E. 711, 712 (1937) (collecting cases), others, like California, did not, see, e.g., Mitchell v. California & O. C. S. S. Co., 156 Cal. 576, 578, 105 P. 590, 592 (1909). Moreover, at least one leading treatise from the era maintained, consistent with our view, that “mistake” encompassed legal errors. See 3 J. Moore & J. Friedman, Moore's Federal Practice §60.05, p. 3280 (1938). Although statutory language “obviously transplanted from another legal source” will often “bring the old soil with it,” Taggart v. Lorenzen, 587 U. S. ____, ____ (2019) (slip op., at 5) (internal quotation marks and alterations omitted), that principle applies only when a term’s meaning was “well-settled” before the transplantation, Neder v. United States, 527 U. S. 1, 22 (1999). Here, it was not.

Finally, Kemp invokes Rule 60(b)’s 1946 amendments replacing “bills of review” and other traditional, postjudgment reopening mechanisms with Rules 60(b)(2) through (b)(6). See Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 60(b) (1946). He argues that Rule 60(b)(6) alone was intended to afford relief for judicial legal errors that had previously been remedied by bills of review, because such errors were not cognizable under Rule 60(b)’s “mistake” provision or its predecessor state rules prior to the 1946 amendments. But, as noted, the pre-amendment Rule 60(b) covered only a party’s mistakes, see supra, at 5–6, and for that reason could not be grounds to correct a judge’s legal mistake. By eliminating that party-specific qualifier, the 1946 amendments opened Rule 60(b)(1) to judicial mistakes of law previously remediable only by bills of review.

* * *

In sum, nothing in the text, structure, or history of Rule 60(b) persuades us to narrowly interpret the otherwise broad term “mistake” to exclude judicial errors of law. Because Kemp’s Rule 60(b) motion alleged such a legal error, we affirm the Eleventh Circuit’s judgment that the motion was cognizable under Rule 60(b)(1), subject to a 1-year limitations period, and, therefore, untimely.

JUSTICE SOTOMAYOR, concurring.

I join the Court’s opinion holding that the term “mistake” in Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b)(1) encompasses a judge’s mistake of law. I write separately to make two points.

First, I join the Court’s opinion with the understanding that nothing in it casts doubt on the availability of Rule 60(b)(6) to reopen a judgment in extraordinary circumstances, including a change in controlling law. See, e.g., Buck v. Davis, 580 U. S. 100, 126, 128 (2017) (concluding that the petitioner was “entitle[d] to relief under Rule 60(b)(6)” because of a change in law and intervening developments of fact); Gonzalez v. Crosby, 545 U. S. 524, 531 (2005) (“[A] motion might contend that a subsequent change in substantive law is a ‘reason justifying relief,’ Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 60(b)(6), from the previous denial of a claim”); Polites v. United States, 364 U. S. 426, 433 (1960) (leaving open that a “clear and authoritative change” in the law governing judgment in a case may present extraordinary circumstances). Today’s decision does not purport to disturb these settled precedents.

Second, I do not understand the Court’s opinion to break any new ground as to Rule 60(c)(1), which requires that all Rule 60(b) motions be “made within a reasonable time.” See 11 C. Wright, A. Miller, & M. Kane, Federal Practice and

[June 13, 2022]

JUSTICE GORSUCH, dissenting.

The Court took this case to determine whether a district court’s mistake of law is correctable under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b)(1) or 60(b)(6).

From the start, granting review was a questionable use of judicial resources. The answer matters only under rare circumstances: A losing party fails to appeal or secure relief under Rule 59(e), opting instead to file a Rule 60(b) motion. That motion comes more than a year after judgment but—piling contingency on contingency—within what the court would otherwise deem a “reasonable time.” Rule 60(c)(1). By petitioner’s own (uncontested) count, his is the first petition ever to present today’s question for this Court’s review. See Pet. for Cert. 24; Brief in Opposition 26. Beyond even that, an alternative route exists to resolve the question posed here. Congress has adopted the Rules Enabling Act. See 28 U. S. C. §§ 2071–2077. Under its terms, a committee composed of judges and practitioners may recommend to this Court any warranted clarifications to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. § 2073. Those recommendations generally take effect upon our approval and absent congressional objection. § 2074.

Undeterred, the Court takes up and resolves this case anyway. It holds that Rule 60(b)(1), not Rule 60(b)(6), applies. In an unexpected twist, the Court adopts a further position neither party saw fit to advance. Going forward, every judicial legal error—not just an inadvertent or obvious “mistake”—is fodder for collateral attack under Rule 60(b)(1). And what is the basis for all this? A mysterious 1946 amendment deleting the word “his.” See ante, at 5–6.

GORSUCH, J., dissenting

Respectfully, I would have dismissed the writ of certiorari as improvidently granted. Not only does this case fail to meet our usual standards for review. See Supreme Court Rule 10. At bottom, this dispute presents a policy question about the proper balance between finality and error correction. Should a district court be able to clean up a legal error through a collateral proceeding on any reasonable timeline within a year of judgment? Or do Rule 59(e) and the appellate process provide the necessary corrective measures in ordinary cases, with Rule 60(b)(6) as a last, narrow avenue to relief? Questions like these are best resolved not through a doubtful interpretive project focused on a pronoun dropped in 1946, but through the rulemaking process. There, policy interests on both sides can be accounted for and weighed in light of the “collective experience of bench and bar.” Mohawk Industries, Inc. v. Carpenter, 558 U. S. 100, 114 (2009).

1336 15. Rule 62(b) – Disclosure of Amount of Security Bond

1337 This matter comes to the Civil Rules Committee on referral from the Appellate Rules
1338 Committee, which has prepared a set of proposed amendments to Appellate Rule 39 that are now
1339 out for public comment through February 2024.

1340 These proposed amendments clarify Rule 39 and some of its terminology, such as replacing 1341 the word “taxed” with the word “allocated.” As amended, Rule 39(a) contains the same basic 1342 provisions as current Rule 39(a).

1343 But the amendments introduce in a new Appellate Rule 39(b) motion for reconsideration
1344 of costs:

1345 (b) Reconsideration. Once the allocation of costs is established by the entry of 1346 judgment, a party may seek reconsideration of that allocation by filing a 1347 motion in the court of appeals within 14 days of the entry of judgment. But 1348 issuance of the mandate under Rule 41 must not be delayed awaiting a 1349 determination of the motion. The court of appeals retains jurisdiction to 1350 decide the motion after the mandate issues.

1351 As under current Appellate Rule 39(e)(3), costs taxable in the district court include 1352 “premiums paid for a bond or other security to preserve rights pending appeal.”

1353 The Rule 62 issue was explained in the Appellate Rules Committee’s report to the Standing
1354 Committee for the June 2023 Standing Committee meeting (agenda book at 76):

1355 The Advisory Committee was unable to come up with a good way to make sure
1356 that the judgment winner in the district court is aware of the cost of the supersedeas
1357 bond early enough to ask the court of appeals to reallocate the costs. Allowing a 1358 party to move for reallocation in the court of appeals after the bill of costs is filed
1359 in the district court would mean that both courts are dealing with the same costs
1360 issue at the same time. Creating a long period to seek reallocation in the court of 1361 appeals would mean that the case would be less fresh in the judges’ minds and begin 1362 to look like a wholly separate appeal. Requiring disclosure in the bill of costs filed
1363 in the court of appeals would be odd because those costs are not sought in the court
1364 of appeals. Plus, a party might forgo the relatively minor costs taxable in the court
1365 of appeals and care only about costs taxable in the district court. It would be 1366 possible to have the court of appeals tax the costs itself, but that would be a major 1367 departure from the principle, endorsed by the Supreme Court in [City of San 1368 Antonio v. Hotels.com], that the court closest to the cost should tax it.

1369 For this reason, the Appellate Rules Committee believes that the easiest and most 1370 obvious time for disclosure is when the bond is before the district court for 1371 approval. It has requested the Civil Rules Committee to consider amending Civil 1372 Rule 62 to require that disclosure.

1373 In City of San Antonio v. Hotels.com, L.P., 141 S.Ct. 1628 (2021), the Court unanimously
1374 held that under Appellate Rule 39 the district court has no authority to decline to tax the entire cost 1375 of a bond on the party that won in the district court but lost in the court of appeals.

1376 Ordinarily this is probably not a major concern, but in the Hotels.com case it was a major 1377 concern because the costs taxed in the district court totalled more than $2.3 million. The underlying 1378 lawsuit was a class action brought by San Antonio on behalf of a class of 173 Texas municipalities
1379 against a number of online travel companies (OTCs) that plaintiffs alleged had been systematically 1380 underpaying hotel occupancy taxes by using wholesale rather than retail rates for hotel rooms.
1381 After a jury trial, the district court entered judgment for $55 million in favor of plaintiffs. That led 1382 to a negotiation about supersedeas bonds (id. at 1632):

1383 The OTCs quickly sought to secure supersedeas bonds to stay the judgment. They 1384 negotiated with San Antonio over the terms of the bonds, and the city ultimately 1385 supported the OTCs’ efforts to stay the judgment with supersedeas bonds totalling 1386 almost $69 million, an amount that was calculated to cover the judgment plus 18
1387 months of interest and further taxes. The District Court approved the bonds, which 1388 were subsequently increased at San Antonio’s urging to cover what grew to be an 1389 $84 million judgment after years of post-trial motions.

1390 The court of appeals reversed, and defendants then filed a bill of costs in the court of 1391 appeals totaling $905.60 to cover the appellate docket fee and the cost of printing filings in the 1392 court of appeals. There was no objection to these costs.

1393 In the district court, however, the OTCs filed a bill of costs for more than $2.3 million, 1394 mainly to cover the premium on the supersedeas bond. San Antonio urged the district court to 1395 decline to award these costs on the ground that “the OTCs should have pursued alternatives to a 1396 supersedeas bond and that it was unfair for San Antonio to bear the costs of the entire class rather 1397 than just its proportional share of the judgment.” Id. at 1633. The district court declined San 1398 Antonio’s invitation on the ground it had no discretion to reallocate costs, and the court of appeals 1399 affirmed.

1400 The Supreme Court affirmed, reading Appellate Rule 39(a)(3) to refer to the court of 1401 appeals in directing that “if a judgment is reversed, costs are taxed against the appellee” unless 1402 “the court orders otherwise.” [Under the pending amendment proposal, new Rule 39(b) would 1403 presumably expressly provide a vehicle for such a request to the court of appeals.] San Antonio 1404 argued that the district court should have discretion to determine an equitable allocation of the 1405 costs, but the Supreme Court held that “Rule 39 gives discretion over the allocation of appellate 1406 costs to the courts of appeals.” Id. at 1634. As a consequence, “district courts cannot alter that 1407 allocation.” Id. at 1636.

1408 The published preliminary draft of proposed amendments to Appellate Rule 39 responds 1409 to this Supreme Court decision. The Committee Note begins: “The [Hotels.com] Court also 1410 observed that ‘the current Rules and the relevant statutes could specify more clearly the procedure
1411 that such a party [as San Antonio] should follow to bring their arguments to the court of appeals.’
1412 This amendment does so.”

1413 But as noted above, it does not ensure that the losing party is aware of the premium for the 1414 supersedeas bond at the time it must file its motion for reconsideration under new Appellate Rule
1415 39(b). Under Rule 62(a), there is an automatic 30-day stay of execution, but unless a further stay 1416 is obtained under Rule 62(b) the judgment may be enforced thereafter.

1417 As suggested by the Appellate Rules Committee, a small change to Rule 62(b) could plug
1418 that gap:

1419 (b) Stay by Bond or Other Security. At any time after judgment is entered, a 1420 party may obtain a stay by providing a bond or other security. The party 1421 seeking the stay must disclose the premium [to be] paid for the bond or other 1422 security. The stay takes effect when the court approves the bond or other 1423 security and remain in effect for the time specified in the bond or other 1424 security.

1425 This amendment does not specify who is to receive this disclosure, but suggests that the 1426 court might consider the prospective premium in deciding whether to approve the security. As a 1427 general matter, assuming “gold plated” providers of security tend to charge higher premiums than 1428 “fly by night” providers of security, it might be odd for the judgment winner to try to persuade the 1429 district court to reject the high-priced security. But introducing the amount of the premium might 1430 occasionally produce tricky issues for district courts making Rule 62(b) decisions in some cases.

1431 One question is whether such an amendment is really needed. As the Supreme Court noted
1432 in Hotels.com (id. at 1636-37):

1433 Most appellate costs are readily estimable, rarely disputed, and frankly not large 1434 enough to engender contentious litigation in the great majority of cases. We 1435 recognize that supersedeas bond premiums are a bit of an outlier in that they can 1436 grow quite large. But the underlying supersedeas bonds will often have been 1437 negotiated by the parties, as happened here. They will in any event have been 1438 approved by the district court, see Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 62(b), and their premiums
1439 will have been paid by one of the parties to the appeal. There is no reason to think 1440 that litigants and courts will be forced to operate without any sense of the magnitude
1441 of the costs at issue. Indeed, San Antonio admits that it was largely aware of the 1442 costs of the bonds in this case when they were approved.

1443 So it may be that the predicament in which San Antonio found itself was a result of its 1444 expectation that it could pitch its arguments to the district court after the appellate reversal. Given 1445 the Court’s ruling that the district court has no such discretion in the face of Appellate Rule 39,
1446 that problem should not recur. The fact this was a class action, and it seems that San Antonio alone
1447 faced taxation for the premium presumably keyed to hotel taxes not paid to many other class 1448 members is another complicating factor in that case.

1449 But the Supreme Court recognized a solution: the losing party can ask the court of appeals
1450 to delegate the authority to allocate costs to the district court (id. at 1637):

1451 In all events, if a court of appeals thinks that a district court is better suited to 1452 allocate the appellate costs listed in Rule 39(e), the court of appeals may delegate

1453 that responsibility to the district court, as several Courts of Appeals have done in 1454 the pat. And nothing we say here should be read to cast doubt on that.

1455 It would seem that a motion under proposed Appellate Rule 39(b) could invite the court of appeals 1456 to do this rather than make its own allocation decision.

1457 Going forward, then, there may be no need for an amendment to Rule 62(b) because this 1458 is not likely to be a real problem, though amending the rule seems unlikely to produce a real 1459 problem, and it would respond to the suggestion of the Appellate Rules Committee.

THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

No. 20–334. Argued April 21, 2021—Decided May 27, 2021

The City of San Antonio—acting on behalf of a class of 173 Texas municipalities—was awarded a multi-million dollar judgment in Federal District Court against a number of popular online travel companies (OTCs) over the calculation of hotel occupancy taxes. To prevent execution on that judgment pending appeal, the OTCs obtained supersedeas bonds securing the judgment. See Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 62. On appeal, the Court of Appeals determined that the OTCs had not underpaid on their taxes. In accordance with Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 39(d), the OTCs filed with the circuit clerk a bill of costs seeking appellate docketing fees and printing costs, which were taxed without objection. The OTCs then filed a bill of costs in the District Court seeking more than $2.3 million in costs—primarily for premiums paid on the supersedeas bonds that are listed in Rule 39(e) as “taxable in the district court for the benefit of the party entitled to costs.” San Antonio objected and urged the District Court to exercise its discretion to decline to tax all or most of those costs. The District Court held that it had no discretion to deny or reduce those costs under Circuit precedent. The Court of Appeals affirmed, reasoning that the District Court lacked discretion to deny or reduce appellate cost awards.

Held: Rule 39 does not permit a district court to alter a court of appeals’ allocation of the costs listed in subdivision (e) of that Rule. Pp. 5–14.

(a) Rule 39 creates a cohesive scheme for taxing appellate costs that gives discretion over the allocation of appellate costs to the courts of appeals. Rule 39(a) sets out default rules for cost allocation based on the outcome of an appeal and provides that these default rules apply unless the court “orders otherwise.” Nothing in the broad language of Rule 39(a) suggests that a court of appeals may not divide up costs in such an order. Quite the opposite, Rule 39(a)(4) suggests that a court of appeals may apportion costs based on each party’s relative success when the results of the appeal are something other than complete affirmance or reversal. Rule 39(e) points in the same direction; it addresses appellate costs taxable in the district court for the benefit of “the party entitled to costs” under the rule (not to a party entitled to seek costs). The court of appeals’ determination that a party is “entitled” to a certain percentage of costs would mean little if the district court could take a second look at the equities. San Antonio contends that the plain text of subsection (e) providing for costs “taxable in the district court” vests district courts with discretion over cost allocations, but that interpretation reads too much into the term “taxable” and ignores the history of the Rule. The real work done by the phrase “taxable in the district court” is in specifying the court in which these costs are to be taxed. Pp. 5–9.

Syllabus

(b) The Court is not persuaded that applying the plain text of Rule 39 will create the problems that San Antonio envisions. First, awarding costs incurred prior to appeal is different from taxing appellate costs. Limiting a district court’s discretion to allocate appellate costs will not cause confusion with the equitable discretion district courts exercise with respect to certain costs incurred in the district court that are customarily taxed under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54(d). Second, there is no evidence to suggest that appellate courts have struggled to allocate appellate costs due to factual disputes better handled by the district court. And nothing in the Court’s decision should be read to cast doubt on the approach taken by some courts of appeals to delegate this responsibility to the district court. See, e.g., Emmenegger v. Bull Moose Tube Co., 324 F. 3d 616, 626. Third, it makes sense for the district court to tax the costs in Rule 39(e) because those costs relate to events in that court. This process requires more than a “ministerial order,” as San Antonio would have it, because the district court will ensure that the amount of appellate costs requested is “correct,” 28 U. S. C. §1924, and that the cost submissions otherwise comply with the relevant rules and statutes. Finally, that the current rules and relevant statutes could specify more clearly the procedure that a party should follow to obtain review of their objections to Rule 39(e) costs in the court of appeals does not mean that a district court can reallocate those costs. A simple motion “for an order” under Rule 27 should suffice to seek an order under Rule 39(a), and the Court does not foreclose parties from raising their arguments through other procedural vehicles. Pp. 9–13.

No. 20–334

CITY OF SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, ON BEHALF OF ITSELF
AND ALL OTHER SIMILARLY SITUATED TEXAS
MUNICIPALITIES, PETITIONER v.
HOTELS.COM, L. P., ET AL.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

[May 27, 2021]

JUSTICE ALITO delivered the opinion of the Court.

Civil litigation in the federal courts is often an expensive affair, and each party, win or lose, generally bears many of its own litigation expenses, including attorney’s fees that are subject to the so-called American Rule. Baker Botts L. P. v. ASARCO LLC, 576 U. S. 121, 126 (2015). But certain “costs” are treated differently. Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 39 governs the taxation of appellate “costs,” and the question in this case is whether a district court has the discretion to deny or reduce those costs. We hold that it does not and therefore affirm the judgment below.

There is a longstanding tradition of awarding certain costs other than attorney’s fees to prevailing parties in the federal courts. Marx v. General Revenue Corp., 568 U. S. 371, 377, and n. 3 (2013); see, e.g., Winchester v. Jackson, 3 Cranch 514 (1806). Today, Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 39 sets out the procedure for assessing and taxing costs relating to appeals. Subdivision (a) provides a series of default rules that govern “unless the law provides or the court orders otherwise.” Under these default rules:

Opinion of the Court

“(1) if an appeal is dismissed, costs are taxed against the appellant, unless the parties agree otherwise;

“(2) if a judgment is affirmed, costs are taxed against the appellant;

“(3) if a judgment is reversed, costs are taxed against the appellee;

“(4) if a judgment is affirmed in part, reversed in part, modified, or vacated, costs are taxed only as the court orders.”

The remaining subdivisions of the Rule deal with related issues. Subdivision (b) limits costs for or against Federal Government litigants to those “authorized by law.” Subdivision (c) directs the courts of appeals to fix a maximum rate for taxing the costs of briefs, appendices, and (where applicable) the original record. Subdivision (d) provides the procedure for seeking certain appellate costs, filing objections to those costs, and preparing an itemized statement of costs for insertion in the mandate. And subdivision (e) lists four categories of “costs on appeal” that “are taxable in the district court for the benefit of the party entitled to costs under this rule.”

This case concerns one of the categories of costs that are taxable in the district court under subdivision (e): “premiums paid for a bond or other security to preserve rights pending appeal.” Fed. Rule App. Proc. 39(e)(3). These costs arise because the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure generally stay the execution or enforcement of a district court judgment for only 30 days after its entry. Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 62(a). Unless a further stay is granted, the prevailing party can attempt to execute on that judgment while an appeal is pending. See 12 J. Moore, D. Coquillette, G. Joseph, G. Vairo, & C. Varner, Moore’s Federal Practice §62.02 (3d

ed. 2020). To prevent complications arising from pre-appeal enforcement of judgments, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 62(b) provides that a party “may obtain a stay by providing a bond or other security.” These bonds are often called supersedeas bonds, tracking the name of a traditional writ that was used to stay the execution of a legal judgment. See, e.g., Hardeman v. Anderson, 4 How. 640, 642 (1846) (issuing a “writ of supersedeas to stay execution on the judgment”). “A supersedeas bond is a contract by which a surety obligates itself to pay a final judgment rendered against its principal under the conditions stated in the bond.” 13 A Cyclopaedia of Federal Procedure §62.19 (3d ed. Supp. 2021).

B

The cost dispute before us arises out of litigation between the city of San Antonio—acting on behalf of a class of 173 Texas municipalities—and a number of popular online travel companies (OTCs). In 2006, San Antonio alleged that the OTCs had been systematically underpaying hotel occupancy taxes by calculating them using the wholesale rate that the OTCs negotiated with hotels rather than the retail rate that consumers paid for hotel rooms. After a jury trial, the District Court entered a judgment of approximately $55 million in favor of the class.

The OTCs quickly sought to secure supersedeas bonds to stay the judgment. They negotiated with San Antonio over the terms of the bonds, and the city ultimately supported the OTCs’ efforts to stay the judgment with supersedeas bonds totaling almost $69 million, an amount that was calculated to cover the judgment plus 18 months of interest and further taxes. The District Court approved the bonds, which were subsequently increased at San Antonio’s urging to cover what grew to be an $84 million judgment after years of post-trial motions.

The OTCs eventually appealed, and the Court of Appeals

Opinion of the Court

held that the OTCs had not underpaid the hotel occupancy taxes. Its mandate stated: “[T]he judgment of the District Court is vacated and rendered for OTCs.” App. 100. In accordance with Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 39(d), the OTCs filed a bill of costs with the Circuit Clerk and requested $905.60 to cover the appellate docket fee and the cost of printing their briefs and appendix. App. to Pet. for Cert. 28a–30a. These items were taxed without objection. See Rule 39(d)(2).<sup>1</sup>

Back in the District Court, the OTCs filed a bill of costs for more than $2.3 million. The lion’s share of these costs were supersedeas bond premiums. San Antonio objected, urging the District Court to exercise its discretion and decline to tax all or most of those costs. The city argued, among other things, that the OTCs should have pursued alternatives to a supersedeas bond and that it was unfair for San Antonio to bear the costs for the entire class rather than just its proportional share of the judgment. The District Court thought San Antonio had made “some persuasive arguments.” App. to Pet. for Cert. 16a. But based on Circuit precedent, the court held that it lacked discretion “regarding whether, when, to what extent, or to which party to award costs of the appeal” and that “its sole responsibility [was] to ensure that only proper costs are awarded.” Id., at 17a (internal quotation marks omitted). The court ultimately taxed costs of just over $2.2 million.

San Antonio appealed, and this time the Court of Appeals affirmed. 959 F. 3d 159 (CA5 2020). It reasoned that its earlier decision had “reversed” the District Court’s judgment within the meaning of Rule 39(a)(3) and that it had not departed from the default allocation under that Rule.

---

<sup>1</sup> Rule 39 has been amended since the Court of Appeals issued its first decision in this case. The changes are not material for our purposes here, so for simplicity we cite the current version of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure unless otherwise noted.

Opinion of the Court

Id., at 164–165.<sup>2</sup> And the Court of Appeals held that the District Court was compelled to award the disputed costs to the OTCs. Id., at 166–167.

San Antonio sought this Court’s review. We granted certiorari, 592 U. S. ____ (2021), and now affirm.

II

We hold that Rule 39 does not permit a district court to alter a court of appeals’ allocation of the costs listed in subdivision (e) of that Rule.

A

Rule 39 creates a cohesive scheme for taxing appellate costs. As noted, it sets out default rules that are geared to five potential outcomes of an appeal: dismissal, affirmance, reversal, affirmance in part and reversal in part, and vacatur. Each of these default rules tracks the “venerable presumption that prevailing parties are entitled to costs.” Marx, 568 U. S., at 377.

These default rules give way, however, when “the court orders otherwise.” Rule 39(a). The parties agree that this reference to “the court” means the court of appeals, not the district court, see Brief for Petitioner 17–18; Brief for Respondents 20–21, and we agree with that interpretation. In the Rules of Appellate Procedure, which “govern procedure in the United States courts of appeals,” Rule 1(a)(1), references to a “court” are naturally read to refer to a court of appeals unless the text or context clearly indicates otherwise.

The parties do not agree, however, on what the court of appeals has the power to “orde[r].” San Antonio thinks that the appellate court may say “who can receive costs (party A, party B, or neither)” but lacks “authority to divide up costs.” Reply Brief 5. So, the city argues, the district court <sup>2</sup>San Antonio does not challenge these features of the court’s decision, see, e.g., Brief for Petitioner 8, n. 2, and we do not address them.

---

Opinion of the Court

must have the discretion to do that. By contrast, the OTCs argue that the appellate court has the discretion to divide up the costs as it deems appropriate and that a district court cannot alter that allocation. The OTCs have the better of the argument.

The text of subdivision (a) cuts decisively in their favor. That provision states that the court of appeals need not follow the default rules, which allocate costs based on the outcome of the appeal, but can “orde[r] otherwise.” This broad language does not limit the ways in which the court of appeals can depart from the default rules, and it certainly does not suggest that the court of appeals may not divide up costs.

On the contrary, the authority of a court of appeals to do just that is strongly supported by the relationship between the default rules and the court of appeals’ authority to “order otherwise.” For example, under Rule 39(a)(4), if a district court judgment is affirmed in part and reversed in part, “costs are taxed only as the court [of appeals] orders.” The most natural meaning of this provision is that a court of appeals may apportion costs in accordance with the parties’ relative success, so that if, for example, the appellant wins what is essentially a 75% victory, the appellant can be awarded 75% of its costs.<sup>3</sup> It would be strange to read this provision to mean that the court of appeals’ only option where a reversal is not complete is to award the appellant all its costs or no costs at all. Similarly, in cases that fall under subdivisions (a)(2) and (a)(3), where the default rules allocate 100% of the costs to the winning party, it is natural to understand the court of appeals' authority to "order otherwise" to include the authority to make a different allocation.

---

<sup>3</sup>Both parties recognize the familiar practice of awarding some proportion of the costs to the winning party. See Tr. of Oral Arg. 15, 44, 76; see, e.g., Massachusetts Eye & Ear Infirmary v. QLT Phototherapeutics, Inc., 552 F. 3d 47, 75 (CA1 2009); In re New Times Securities Servs., Inc., 371 F. 3d 68, 88 (CA2 2004); Burrell v. Star Nursery, Inc., 170 F. 3d 951, 957 (CA9 1999); Quaker Action Group v. Andrus, 559 F. 2d 716, 719 (CADC 1977) (per curiam).

Opinion of the Court

Subdivision (e), which concerns appellate costs that are taxed in the district court, points in the same direction. It refers to "the party entitled to costs under this rule." Rule 39(e) (emphasis added). Thus, if a party is awarded costs under subdivision (a), it is "entitled" to those costs—i.e., has a right to obtain them and not merely to seek them—when a proper application is made in the district court. See Black's Law Dictionary 626 (rev. 4th ed. 1968) ("In its usual sense, to entitle is to give a right or title"); see also Estate of Cowart v. Nicklos Drilling Co., 505 U. S. 469, 477 (1992) ("Both in legal and general usage, the normal meaning of entitlement includes a right or benefit for which a person qualifies").

Read properly, then, Rule 39 gives discretion over the allocation of appellate costs to the courts of appeals. With that settled, it is easy to see why district courts cannot exercise a second layer of discretion. Suppose that a court of appeals, in a case in which the district court's judgment is affirmed, awards the prevailing appellee 70% of its costs. If the district court, in an exercise of its own discretion, later reduced those costs by half, the appellee would receive only 35% of its costs—in direct violation of the court of appeals' directions. Or suppose that the court of appeals, believing that the decision below was plainly wrong, awards the prevailing appellant 100% of its costs. It would subvert that allocation if the district court declined to tax costs or substantially reduced them because it thought that there was at least a very strong argument in favor of the decision that the court of appeals had reversed—which, of course, was the district court's own decision. In short, the court of appeals' determination that a party is "entitled" to costs would mean little if, as San Antonio believes, the district court could take a second look at the equities.

Opinion of the Court

San Antonio nonetheless maintains that the plain text of subdivision (e) vests district courts with discretion over cost allocations. That provision lists costs that “are taxable in the district court for the benefit of the party entitled to costs under this rule.” Rule 39(e) (emphasis added). As San Antonio notes, the word “taxable” can be used to describe something that may, but need not necessarily, be taxed. See, e.g., Random House Dictionary of the English Language 1947 (2d ed. 1987) (defining “taxable” as “capable of being taxed”); Webster’s Third New International Dictionary 2345 (1976) (same). And San Antonio argues that the use of this “permissive” term shows that the district court has discretion to refuse to award costs on equitable grounds. Brief for Petitioner 15.

San Antonio reads too much into the term “taxable.” The use of that term does suggest that the costs in question are not automatically or necessarily taxed when the case returns to the district court, but that may mean no more than that the party seeking those costs will not get them unless it submits a bill of costs with the verification specified by statute and complies with any other procedural requirements that the local rules of the court in question impose. See 28 U. S. C. §§1920, 1924.

This modest understanding of the use of the term “taxable” is reinforced by the circumstances under which the term was added to Rule 39. Before 1998, subdivision (e) did not provide that the listed costs “are taxable in the district court,” but instead stated that those costs “shall be taxed in the district court.” Rule 39(e) (1994). The language of Rule 39 was changed in 1998 as part of a general “restyling” of the Rules of Appellate Procedure, and the Advisory Committee’s Note stated that the changes made as part of this project were “intended to be stylistic only.” 28 U. S. C. App., p. 804 (1994 ed., Supp. IV); see also C. Wright, A. Miller, & C. Struve, Federal Practice and Procedure, Introduction,

Opinion of the Court

§3946.1 (5th ed. Supp. 2021) (1998 restyling was “not intended to make substantive changes”).

The real work done by the phrase “taxable in the district court” is the specification of the court in which these costs are to be taxed—that is, in the district court. Assigning this work to the district court makes good sense. Under Rule 39, costs incurred in the court of appeals, such as the fee for docketing the case in that court and the cost of printing the party’s briefs and appendices, are taxed in the court of appeals. See Rule 39(d). And the costs incurred in the district court—that is, the costs listed in subdivision (e)—are taxed in the district court. These are the costs attributable to “the preparation and transmission of the record,” “the reporter’s transcript, if needed to determine the appeal,” “premiums paid for a bond or other security to preserve rights pending appeal,” and “the fee for filing the notice of appeal.”

The nature of these costs makes it fitting for them to be taxed in the district court. The first enumerated cost—the cost of “the preparation and transmission of the record”—relates to the district court clerk, who has the responsibility of performing those tasks. See Fed. Rule App. Proc. 11(b)(2). The second category, the cost of “the reporter’s transcript,” concerns work done in the district court. See Rule 10(b). The third category, “premiums paid for a bond or other security to preserve rights pending appeal,” relates to a matter previously approved by the district court. See Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 62(b). And the last category, “the fee for filing the notice of appeal,” is an amount that was paid to the district court clerk. See 28 U. S. C. §1917.

For the reasons set out above, we hold that courts of appeals have the discretion to apportion all the appellate costs covered by Rule 39 and that district courts cannot alter that allocation.

B

San Antonio offers a variety of practical arguments why

Opinion of the Court

district courts should have the discretion to alter the allocation of appellate costs, but each of these arguments falls away upon inspection.

First, San Antonio argues that any limits on a district court's discretion are incompatible with the equitable discretion district courts exercise with respect to certain costs incurred in the district court. Those costs are customarily taxed under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54(d), which "gives courts the discretion to award costs to prevailing parties." Taniguchi v. Kan Pacific Saipan, Ltd., 566 U. S. 560, 565 (2012); see also 28 U. S. C. §1920 ("A judge or clerk of any court of the United States may tax as costs the following . . . ." (emphasis added)).<sup>4</sup> In San Antonio's view, it will create confusion if a district court acting under Appellate Rule 39(e) lacks the discretion it exercises under Civil Procedure Rule 54(d).

We do not see why our interpretation will lead to confusion. District courts have discretion in awarding costs incurred prior to appeal, but when they tax appellate costs, they perform a different function. This interpretation quite sensibly gives federal courts at each level primary discretion over costs relating to their own proceedings. See this Court's Rule 43; Fed. Rule App. Proc. 39; Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 54.

Second, San Antonio contends that appellate courts are not well-positioned to make cost allocations under Rule 39(a). In its view, decisions about appellate costs might turn on factual disputes that district courts are better able <sup>4</sup>As the United States points out, see Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae 19, n. 4, we have interpreted Rule 54(d) to provide for taxing only the costs already made taxable by statute, namely, 28 U. S. C. §1920. See Crawford Fitting Co. v. J. T. Gibbons, Inc., 482 U. S. 437, 441–442 (1987). Supersedeas bond premiums, despite being referenced in Appellate Rule 39(e)(3), are not listed as taxable costs in §1920. San Antonio has not raised any argument that Rule 39 is inconsistent with §1920 in this respect. We accordingly do not consider this issue.

---

Opinion of the Court

to resolve. For example, a party might suggest that taxing costs against it would be unjust because of its precarious financial position, and an opposing party might dispute that contention on factual grounds. San Antonio also contends that it will be difficult to allocate appellate costs equitably before the amount of those costs is known.

These concerns are overblown. Most appellate costs are readily estimable, rarely disputed, and frankly not large enough to engender contentious litigation in the great majority of cases. We recognize that supersedeas bond premiums are a bit of an outlier in that they can grow quite large. See, e.g., The Exxon Valdez v. Exxon Mobil Corp., 568 F. 3d 1077 (CA9 2009) (more than $60 million). But the underlying supersedeas bonds will often have been negotiated by the parties, as happened here. They will in any event have been approved by the district court, see Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 62(b), and their premiums will have been paid by one of the parties to the appeal. There is no reason to think that litigants and courts will be forced to operate without any sense of the magnitude of the costs at issue. Indeed, San Antonio admits that it was largely aware of the costs of the bonds in this case when they were approved, see Tr. of Oral Arg. 18.

Nor is there reason to think that factual disputes will pose a recurring problem. Experience proves the point. Rule 39's basic structure has been in place for more than 50 years. Compare Fed. Rule App. Proc. 39 with Rule 39 (1968). And the courts of appeals resolve tens of thousands of cases each year. Admin. Office of the U. S. Courts, Statistical Tables for the Federal Judiciary, Table B-1 (Dec. 31, 2020) (counting 46,788 appeals terminated in 2020). Yet San Antonio has not identified any substantial number of cases where cost allocations under Rule 39(a) have imposed real difficulties. In sum, we see no evidence that appellate courts have struggled to allocate costs in the past, and we have no reason to anticipate new problems in the future.

Opinion of the Court

In all events, if a court of appeals thinks that a district court is better suited to allocate the appellate costs listed in Rule 39(e), the court of appeals may delegate that responsibility to the district court, as several Courts of Appeals have done in the past. See, e.g., Emmenegger v. Bull Moose Tube Co., 324 F. 3d 616, 626 (CA8 2003); Guse v. J. C. Penney Co., 570 F. 2d 679, 681–682 (CA7 1978). The parties agree that this pragmatic approach is permitted. See Tr. of Oral Arg. 15, 44. And nothing we say here should be read to cast doubt on it. See Rule 39(a) (imposing no direct limitations on the court’s ability to “orde[r] otherwise”); Rule 41(a) (the mandate includes “any direction about costs”).

Third, San Antonio contends that there would be no reason for Rule 39(e) costs to be taxed in the district court, as opposed to the court of appeals, if the district court was simply required to enter “a ministerial order.” Brief for Petitioner 17. But it makes sense for these costs to be taxed in the district court because they relate to events in that court, and the district court’s responsibility is not ministerial. The district court will ensure that the amount requested for the appellate costs in question is “correct.” 28 U. S. C. §1924. In addition, the district court will consider whether the costs were “necessarily” incurred, §1924, to the extent that the costs in question are taxable only if they were needed for the appeal or to stay the district court’s judgment pending appeal. See Rule 39(e)(2) (cost of reporter’s transcript taxable only “if needed to determine the appeal”). Other costs taxable in the district court under Rule 39(e) are either fixed (subdivision (e)(4): the fee for filing the notice of appeal); calculated by the district court clerk (subdivision (e)(1): preparation and transmission of the record); or concern a matter already approved by the district court (subdivision (e)(3): supersedeas bond premiums; see Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 62(b)).

San Antonio, however, asked the District Court to do much more. It implored the court to exercise a free-ranging form of equitable discretion that would directly conflict with the equitable discretion of the Court of Appeals. See Brief for Petitioner 20, n. 5 (outlining a wide range of equitable considerations). And it invited the District Court to deny or reduce for equitable reasons the bona fide costs that the OTCs had paid as premiums for supersedeas bonds that were known and negotiated by San Antonio and were approved by the District Court without objection under Rule 62. The lower courts were correct to hold that the District Court lacked the authority to entertain San Antonio’s broad, equitable arguments.

Finally, San Antonio worries that parties will be unable to obtain review of their objections to Rule 39(e) costs if the district court cannot provide relief after the matter returns to that court. We agree that the current Rules and the relevant statutes could specify more clearly the procedure that such a party should follow to bring their arguments to the court of appeals, but this does not lead to the conclusion that a district court can reallocate those costs.

Rule 27 sets forth a generally applicable procedure for seeking relief in a court of appeals, and a simple motion “for an order” under Rule 27 should suffice to seek an order under Rule 39(a). Compare Fed. Rule App. Proc. 39(a) (“The following rules apply unless . . . the court orders otherwise”) with Rule 27(a) (“An application for an order . . . is made by motion unless these rules prescribe another form”). The OTCs also identify instances where parties have raised their arguments through other procedural vehicles, including merits briefing, see Rule 28, objections to a bill of costs, see Rule 39(d)(2), and petitions for rehearing, see Rule 40. Brief for Respondents 42, nn. 9–11. We do not foreclose litigants from raising their arguments in any manner consistent with the relevant federal and local Rules.

In short, we are not persuaded that applying the plain text of Rule 39 will create the practical problems that San Antonio envisions.

1460 16. Rule 81(c) – 15-CV-A

1461 This submission has been revived because an intervening submission has been removed 1462 from the Committee’s agenda. In January, 2015, attorney Mike Wray submitted 15-CV-A, arguing
1463 that a change made during the “restyling” of the whole set of Civil Rules in 2007 had inadvertently
1464 produced a change to Rule 81(c) that created a trap for litigants about the need to make a prompt
1465 demand for a jury trial after removal from state court. As Mr. Wray puts it, his client lost a right
1466 to jury trial due to the “botched ‘style’ changes of 2007.” In support of his submission, he cites 1467 records of the rules committees reflecting opposition in the bar to the overall restyling project. 15-
1468 CV-A should be included in this agenda book.

1469 It is not clear that the change of verb tense effected by the restyling in 2007 contributed to 1470 the problem raised by Mr. Wray. Instead, it seems that a Ninth Circuit decision from 1983, under 1471 the previous version of the rule, was the principal reason why his belated jury demand in a removed 1472 case was stricken. As he says in his submission, at pp. 4-6, his objection is that district courts in 1473 the Ninth Circuit continue to apply the 1983 Ninth Circuit Ruling even though the rule was slightly 1474 changed in 2007.

1475 Rule 81(c)(3)(A) says that no demand for jury trial need be made after removal “[i]f the 1476 state law did not require an express demand for a jury trial * * * unless the court orders the parties 1477 to do so within a specified time.” Thus, it seems to be focused on removal from state courts in 1478 which there is no requirement to demand a jury trial, and not focused on when in a state court 1479 proceeding the jury demand must be made.

1480 Under Rule 38(b)(1), a party must demand a jury trial “no later than 14 days after the last 1481 pleading directed to the issue is served.” But state court requirements may vary. Rule 81(c)(1) is 1482 clear that different state practices do not matter from the time the case is removed. Rule 81(c)(3)(A) 1483 makes it clear that if a party expressly demanded a jury trial before removal, it need not renew the 1484 demand after removal. But in many states the time to demand a jury trial is later in the case. So the 1485 rule as of the time the Ninth Circuit made its 1983 decision said that if state law “does not require 1486 an express demand,” none is required in federal court unless the court so orders in the case.

1487 In Lewis v. Time, Inc., 710 F.2d 557 (9th Cir. 1983), the court applied Rule 81(c) as then 1488 written to require a demand for jury trial within the time specified in Rule 38(b)(1) (id. at 556):

1489 Lewis did not request a jury trial before his case was removed from California state 1490 court. Under California law, a litigant waives trial by jury by, inter alia, failing to 1491 “announce that one is required” when the trial is set. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 631, 1492 631.1. We understand that to mean that an “express demand” is required. Therefore,
1493 F.R. Civ. P. 38(d), made applicable by Rule 81(c), required Lewis to file a demand 1494 “not later than 10 days after the last pleading directed to such issue [to be tried].”
1495 Failure to file within the time provided constituted a waiver of the right to trial by 1496 jury. Rule 38(d).

1497 When this submission was presented to the Standing Committee at its June 2016 meeting,
1498 two members of that committee – then-judge Neil Gorsuch and Judge Susan Graber – submitted
1499 16-CV-F, a proposal to amend Rule 38 so it would direct a jury trial occur whenever there was a

1500 right to jury trial, which is the treatment of jury trial under the Criminal Rules. Had this change 1501 been adopted, there would be no need to address this submission; jury demands would not be 1502 necessary under Rule 38 if so amended. In that sense, one might say the federal rule would be the 1503 same as the state-court rule addressed in Rule 81(c)(3)(A) – “state law did not require an express 1504 demand for a jury trial” – because there would be a jury trial unless both sides and the judge agreed 1505 to have a court trial.

1506 The Federal Judicial Center did extensive research on jury demands under Rules 38 and 1507 39, ultimately finding little or no evidence that the demand requirements of Rule 38 resulted in the 1508 loss of the right to jury trial. Based on that research, the Advisory Committee during its March 1509 2023 meeting decided to remove the Gorsuch/Graber proposal from the agenda.

1510 But that did not resolve the question whether a change to Rule 81(c) should be considered
1511 to avoid loss of the right to a jury trial in removed actions. Accordingly, below is the report made 1512 to the Standing Committee for its January 2016 meeting; the matter is now restored to the Advisory 1513 Committee’s agenda.

1514 But as suggested above, the change in verb tense in the 2007 restyling seems somewhat
1515 remote from the underlying concern, which appears to be that the Ninth Circuit has not correctly
1516 interpreted the rule. But it is not clear that the Ninth Circuit interpretation was wrong. And it is not 1517 clear that – even if the Ninth Circuit’s interpretation was wrong – the rule should be changed
1518 because one circuit has interpreted them in an inappropriate way. Going back to the pre-2007
1519 wording does not seem to solve the problem, since that is the wording the Ninth Circuit was 1520 interpreting in 1983.

1521 * * * * *

1522 Agenda Memo, Spring 2016 meeting

1523 This submission was on the November agenda but was carried forward without an 1524 opportunity for consideration. It addresses a single word in Rule 81(c)(3)(A), altered in the Style
1525 Project. The specific problem is narrow; it will be identified after setting out the full text of Rule
1526 81(c)(3). Examination of the specific problem in the setting of the full rule suggests more serious
1527 questions. It seems worthwhile to identify the questions, even if the most likely outcome will be 1528 to put all of them aside to defer to more pressing work. Apart from this one submission, there is 1529 little reason to believe that significant problems are arising in practice.

1530 RULE 81. APPLICABILITY OF THE RULES IN GENERAL; REMOVED ACTIONS

1531 (c) Removed Actions.

1532 (1) Applicability. These rules apply to a civil action after it is removed from a state 1533 court.

1534 * * *

1535 (3) Demand for a Jury Trial.

1536 (A) As Affected by State Law. A party who, before removal, expressly 1537 demanded a jury trial in accordance with state law need not renew the 1538 demand after removal. If the state law ~~does~~ did not require an express 1539 demand for a jury trial, a party need not make one after removal unless the 1540 court orders the parties to do so within a specified time. The court must so 1541 order at a party’s request and may so order on its own. A party who fails to 1542 make a demand when so ordered waives a jury trial.

1543 (B) Under Rule 38. If all necessary pleadings have been served at the time of 1544 removal, a party entitled to a jury trial under Rule 38 must be given one if 1545 the party serves a demand within 14 days after:

1546 (i) it files a notice of removal; or

1547 (ii) it is served with a notice of removal filed by another party.

1548 [The Style Project rewording challenged by 15-CV-A is shown by overlining the pre-2007 word, 1549 “does,” and underlining the substitute, “did.”]

1550 The specific suggestion focuses narrowly on the change from “does” to “did.” The 1551 suggestion is that the change has created a trap for the unwary. So long as the rule said “does,” it 1552 was clear that an express demand for jury trial must be made unless state law allows a jury trial
1553 without making an express request at any time. Saying “did” may lead some to believe that they 1554 need not make an express demand for jury trial after removal if state law, although requiring a 1555 demand at some point, allowed the demand to be made later than the time the case was removed 1556 to federal court. Cases are cited to show that federal courts continue to interpret the rule as if it 1557 says “does;” an appendix includes a decision granting a motion to strike a jury demand made by 1558 the lawyer who made the submission. The opinion relies on the 2007 Committee Note stating that 1559 the changes were intended to be stylistic only.

1560 Initial research into the change from “does” to “did” has explored Civil Rules Committee
1561 agenda books, Committee Minutes, and a substantial number of memoranda prepared for the Style
1562 Subcommittees. They show that “did” appeared in the style draft at least as early as September 30, 1563 2004, but do not show any discussion of this specific change. They also show an intriguing hint in 1564 a note recognizing that “Joe Spaniol is right” that there is a gap in the rule, but suggesting that it
1565 cannot be fixed — if fixing is needed — in the Style Project. One question is whether there is a 1566 gap that is worth filling. A broader question is whether the whole rule is unnecessarily complicated.
1567 The complication can be illustrated by looking for the gap.

1568 At least these situations can be imagined:

1569 (1) A jury trial was “expressly demanded * * * in accordance with state law” before removal. It 1570 makes sense to carry the demand forward after removal.

1571 (2) Rule 81(c)(3)(B): All necessary pleadings have been served at the time of removal, but no
1572 express demand for jury trial was made. The rule applies the same principle as Rule 38(b)(1), 1573 adjusting the time for the circumstance of removal — a demand must be served, not “14 days after 1574 the last pleading directed to the issue is served,” but 14 days after removing or being served with

1575 the notice of removal. This provides the advantages sought by Rule 38(b): the parties and the court 1576 know whether this is to be a jury case early in the proceedings.

1577 (3) All necessary pleadings have not been served at the time of removal. Here the principle of Rule
1578 81(c)(1) seems to do the job — Rule 38 applies of its own force after removal. The most sensible 1579 reading of the rule text is that an exception is made for cases where state law does not require a 1580 demand for jury trial.

1581 (4) State law does not require a demand for jury trial at any point. The Rule was amended in 1963
1582 to say that a demand need not be made after removal. The Committee Note said this is “to avoid 1583 unintended waivers of jury trial.” But the amendment went on to provide, as the rule still does, that 1584 the court may order that a demand be made; failure to comply waives the right to jury trial. The 1585 Committee Note added the suggestion that “a district court may find it convenient to establish a 1586 routine practice of giving these directions to the parties in appropriate cases.” Professor Kaplan, 1587 Reporter for the Committee, elaborated on the Note in a law review article quoted in 9 Federal 1588 Practice & Procedure: Civil 3d, § 2319, p, 230, n. 12. He suggested that it might be useful to adopt 1589 a local rule “under which the direction is to be given routinely.” But he further suggested that it is 1590 important to give the parties notice in each case, since relying on a local rule alone “would recreate
1591 the difficulty which the amendment seeks to meet.” These observations may address the question
1592 why it would not be better to complement subparagraph (B) by providing that if all necessary
1593 pleadings have not been served at the time of removal, Rule 38(b) applies. The apparent concern
1594 is that people will not pay attention to the Federal Rules after removal when they are habituated to 1595 a state procedure that provides jury trial without requiring an express demand at any point. That 1596 explanation seems to fit with the observation in § 2319 that “a number of courts have held that this 1597 provision is applicable only if the case automatically would have been set for jury trial in the state 1598 court * * * without the necessity of any action on the part of the party desiring jury trial.”

1599 (5) State law does require an express demand for jury trial, but the time for the demand is set at a 1600 point after the time when the case is removed. The Nevada rule involved in the docket suggestion, 1601 for example, allows a demand to be made not later than entry of the order first setting the case for 1602 trial. This is the circumstance in which the change from “does” to “did” may create some 1603 uncertainty. One possible reading is that the change reflects concern that state law may have 1604 changed after removal: it did not require an express demand at any time in the progress of the case,
1605 but has been revised after removal to require an express demand. That is a fine-grained 1606 explanation. Another possible reading is that no demand need be made after removal so long as 1607 the state-court deadline had not been reached before removal. That reading can be resisted on at 1608 least two grounds. One is that the change was made in the Style Project, and thus must be read to 1609 carry forward the meaning of the rule as it was. A second is that the result is unfortunate: although 1610 both state and federal systems require an express demand, none need be made because of the 1611 differences in the deadlines. There is little reason to suppose that a party who wishes a jury trial
1612 should believe that removal provides relief from the demand requirement. Anyone who actually 1613 reads the rules should at least recognize the uncertainty and make a demand. It makes little sense 1614 to read the rule in a way that is most likely to make a difference only when a party belatedly decides 1615 to opt for a jury trial.

1616 The immediate question is whether the style choice should be reversed to promote clarity.
1617 “Does” took on an apparently established and quite limited meaning. It is possible to read “did” in

1618 the Style Rule to have a different meaning. But the Committee has been reluctant to revisit choices
1619 made in the Style Project, particularly when the courts — no matter what may be the experience 1620 of particular lawyers — seem to be getting it right. If that were all that might be considered, the 1621 case for amending the rule may not be strong.

1622 But it is worth asking whether it makes sense to perpetuate the exception for cases removed 1623 from courts in however many states there be that do not require a demand for jury trial at all. One
1624 example would be a state that does not provide for jury trial in a particular case — but that does 1625 not offer much reason to excuse a demand requirement after removal. Perhaps the rule has been 1626 too eager to protect those who refuse to read Rule 81(c) to find out that federal procedure governs
1627 after removal. There is a strong federal interest in the early demand requirement of Rule 38(b). All 1628 parties and the court know from the outset whether they are moving toward a jury trial, however
1629 likely it is that the case will ever get there. The risk that a party may decide to opt for a jury trial 1630 only because the judge does not seem sufficiently sympathetic is reduced. Rule 39(b) protects the 1631 opportunity to reclaim a jury trial after failing to make a timely demand.

1632 Rule 81(c) would be much simpler, a not inconsiderable virtue in this setting, if it were 1633 recast to read something like this:

1634 (3) Demand for a Jury Trial. Rule 38(b) governs a demand for jury trial unless, before
1635 removal, a party expressly demanded a jury trial in accordance with state law. If all 1636 necessary pleadings have been served at the time of removal, a party entitled to a
1637 jury trial under Rule 38 must be given one if the party serves a demand within 14 1638 days after:

- 1639 (A) it files a notice of removal, or
- 1640 (B) it is served with a notice of removal filed by another party.

1641 With all of this, the two most likely choices are these: Do nothing, or undertake a thorough 1642 reexamination of Rule 81(c). Matters can be resolved reasonably without changing “did” back to 1643 “does.” But the complex and incomplete structure of Rule 81(c), built on sympathy for those who 1644 refuse to consult the rules, might benefit from significant simplification.

Subject: Change to Rule 81

As for the body of people that apparently is meeting April 9-10 in Wash., D.C., to discuss the civil rules, please consider the following:

I propose that Fed. R. Civ. P. 81 be amended by adding words to clarify that in a case removed from state to federal court, if the state law requires a jury demand to be filed, and one was not required to be filed before the removal under the applicable state law, a jury demand does not have to be filed following removal until the federal judge orders it to be filed.

I actually think the rule already reads the way I stated it in the previous sentence, but in the Ninth Circuit, relying on an old case that predates the 2007 rule changes, the judges have uniformly denied jury demands for allegedly being untimely, using an interpretation of the rule that frankly is contrary to the way the rule actually reads. I have attached a brief and a court order to prove my point. I am not alone on this issue. There are dozens of cases from across the country that have dealt with it.

One would think that of all the things that should be protected by a simple rule, it is the ability to have a jury trial. Under Rule 81, however, that fundamental right is easily lost, due to the botched "style" changes of 2007.

As my reason for this rule change, I submit that Rule 81 as amended by this Committee in 2007 during the so-called "style" changes has created a trap for the unwary by changing the present tense to the past tense, and yet courts continue interpreting the rule in the present tense, to make jury demands untimely, as occurred in my case. If what I just said is unclear, please read the attached brief, which I hope will make the problem clearer. In short, the rule itself needs to be clarified, so that the courts will apply it according to the way it is actually written.

Many of the contributors to the process of the 2007 "style" changes objected repeatedly that the "style" changes would lead to costs to parties that were not acceptable. They included the group from the Eastern District of New York and others. I don't know why their cogent and compelling input was ignored, but it was ignored.

Somehow, some sub-committee of persons operating under the auspices of the full committee (the administrative office of the courts repelled my efforts to get the actual records to find out who, and why, and where, and how) approved Rule 81 language that changed the present tense to past tense, and the overall rules committee then pronounced that draft acceptable.

The big committee has minutes stating that the big committee felt that whatever "costs" may be borne by those of us subject to the substantive and unintended consequences of "style" changes, those costs are "acceptable".

I respectfully disagree. Enough people, like my client, have paid the "costs", and the "costs" are unacceptable. This is an unfairly tricky rule that can be easily clarified, and needs to be fixed. Please do so. Thanks.

Case No. 2:13-cv-00931-RCJ-VPC

15 vs.

(Eighth Judicial District Court
Case No. A-13-679826)

16 SHOTGUN NEVADA INVESTMENTS,
17 LLC, a Nevada limited liability company;
18 SHOTGUN CREEK LAS VEGAS, LLC,
19 a Nevada limited liability company;
20 SHOTGUN CREEK INVESTMENTS,
21 LLC, a Washington State limited liability
22 company; and WAYNE PERRY, an 23 individual,

PLAINTIFF'S RESPONSE TO
DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO STRIKE JURY DEMAND

24 Defendants.
_____ /

25 In this action removed from the District Court in and for Clark County, 26 Nevada, Plaintiff filed a jury demand September 18, 2014, two days after this 27 Court denied the Defendants' motion for summary judgment. With summary
28 judgment having been denied, Plaintiff believed it was appropriate to consolidate

1 this action with the Desert Lands case (3:11-cv-00613-RCJ-VPC), file demands
2 for jury in both cases, and prepare for trial. See Wray Decl., attached.

3 According to the applicable rule for jury demands in actions removed from 4 state court, Plaintiff believes his jury demand was timely. Fed. R. Civ. P.
5 81(c)(3)(A) states:

6 (3) Demand for a Jury Trial.

8 (A) As Affected by State Law. A party who, before removal,
9 expressly demanded a jury trial in accordance with state law need
10 not renew the demand after removal. If the state law did not require 11 an express demand for a jury trial, a party need not make one after 12 removal unless the court orders the parties to do so within a 13 specified time. The court must so order at a party's request and may 14 so order on its own. A party who fails to make a demand when so 15 ordered waives a jury trial.

14 This case was removed from a state court in Nevada. Under Nevada law, 15 “[a]ny party may demand a trial by jury of any issue triable of right by a jury by 16 serving as required by Rule 5(b) upon the other parties a demand therefor in 17 writing at any time after the commencement of the action and not later than the 18 time of the entry of the order first setting the case for trial.” Nev. R. Civ. P. 38(b).
19 Thus, jury demands are not required to be filed in Nevada state court until the time
20 of the entry of the order first setting the case for trial.

21 Defendants removed this action within 30 days of being served with the 22 Summons and Complaint and before even filing their Answer to the Complaint.
23 ECF No. 1, 4. Obviously, at that point in time, a jury demand was not required by 24 Nevada law. In such a situation, the second sentence of Rule 81(c)(3)(A) states:
25 “If the state law did not require an express demand for a jury trial, a party need not 26 make one after removal unless the court orders the parties to do so within a 27 specified time.” The Court still has not ordered the parties to file a jury demand
28

1 within a specified time, and thus the Plaintiff’s jury demand filed September 18,
2 2014 was timely under the rule.

3 Defendants now bring this Motion to Strike Plaintiff’s Jury Demand (ECF
4 No. 69), objecting that the second sentence of Fed. R. Civ. P. 81(c)(3)(A) is 5 inapplicable because “the second sentence applies where State Law does not
6 require an express demand for jury trial and Nevada law, NRCivP Rule 38, does 7 require an express demand for a jury trial.” Motion, ECF No. 69, p. 8:5-7
8 (emphasis in original).

9 The Defendants’ argument incorporates a subtle, yet significant,
10 anachronism that leads to a faulty interpretation of Rule 81(c)(3)(A). The 11 Defendants argue that Rule 81(c)(3)(A) applies when state law “does not require 12 an express demand for jury trial,” thus using the present tense of the verb. The 13 second sentence of the rule actually is written in the past tense: “If the state law 14 did not require an express demand for jury trial . . .”. The shift from present to 15 past tense results in a change in the meaning of the rule that is significant to 16 deciding this motion.

17 Using the present tense, as the Defendants choose to do, the meaning is that 18 if the state law does not require an express demand for jury trial; i.e., if no express
19 demand for jury trial is required by state law at any time, then the Court must order 20 the parties to file a demand. Stated alternatively, using the present tense, if at any 21 time the state law requires an express demand for jury trial, then Rule 81(c)(3)(A) 22 does not apply, and a jury demand must be filed with 14 days of filing of the last 23 pleading directed to the issue. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 38(b)(1).

24 On the other hand, using the past tense, which is how the rule is written, of 25 course, the meaning is that if the state law did not require an express demand for 26 jury trial; i.e., if the Plaintiff did not have to make a jury demand under state law
27 before the case was removed, then the Plaintiff need not make a jury demand until 28

1 ordered to do so. Reading Rule 81(c)(3)(A) as it is written, therefore, Plaintiff
2 filed a timely jury demand on September 18, 2014.

3 The use of the present tense is an anachronism because prior to 2007, the 4 rule was written in the present tense -- “does not” -- and starting in 2007, the rule
5 was changed to the past tense -- “did not”. The Defendants’ motion disregards this 6 distinction, but in fairness, court decisions have overlooked it as well.

7 A leading case on Rule 81(c) in the Ninth Circuit is Lewis v. Time, Inc., 710
8 F.2d 549, 556 (9th Cir. 1983), which has been cited by courts in the Ninth Circuit at 9 least 27 times for its interpretation of the rule. When Lewis was decided in 1983,
10 Rule 81(c) was written in the present tense, and stated, in pertinent part: “If state 11 law applicable in the court from which the case is removed does not require the 12 parties to make express demands in order to claim trial by jury, they need not make 13 demands after removal unless the court directs that they do so. . .”. Id. The court
14 held in Lewis that California law does require an express demand when the trial is 15 set. Id. Lewis had not requested a trial before his case was removed from 16 California state court. Id. “Therefore, F.R. Civ. P. 38(d), made applicable by Rule 17 81(c), required Lewis to file a demand ‘not later than 10 days after the service of 18 the last pleading directed to such issue [to be tried].’ Failure to file within the time 19 provided constituted a waiver of the right to trial by jury. Rule 38(d).” Id. (The 20 10-day deadline subsequently was extended to 14 days by other rule amendments.)

21 This holding from Lewis continues to be followed, uncritically, by district
22 courts in the Ninth Circuit. See, e.g., Ortega v. Home Depot U.S.A., Inc., 2012
23 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2787 (E.D.Cal. 2012) (following Lewis as to its interpretation of 24 Rule 81(c)(3)(A)); Nascimento v. Wells Fargo Bank, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25 111019 (D.Nev. 2011) (applying the Lewis holdings to an action removed from 26 Nevada state court); Kaldor v. Skolnik, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 137109 (D.Nev.
27 2010) (finding that under Lewis, Rule 81(c)(3)(A) is inapplicable if state law
28

1 requires an express demand for jury trial, “regardless of when the demand is 2 required”).

3         With due respect for these district court decisions, it is questionable that they 4 would follow the holding in Lewis today, as a matter of stare decisis, given the 5 intervening changes in Rule 81(c). For Lewis to supply the rule of decision, it
6 would seem that one must discount the change from the present to the past tense –
7 from “does not” to “did not” -- as having no effect on the meaning of the second 8 sentence of Rule 81(c)(3)(A). Disregarding differences in words runs counter to 9 well-established rules of statutory construction. See Boise Cascade Corp. v.
10 United States EPA, 942 F.2d 1427, 1432 (9th Cir. 1991) (“Under accepted canons
11 of statutory interpretation, we must interpret statutes as a whole, giving effect to 12 each word and making every effort not to interpret a provision in a manner that 13 renders other provisions of the same statute inconsistent, meaningless or 14 superfluous.”); In re Transcon Lines, 58 F.3d 1432, 1437 (9th Cir. 1995) (the 15 cardinal principle is that the plain meaning of a statute controls).

16         Furthermore, taking the view that the change from “does not ” to “did not”
17 makes no difference to the meaning of the second sentence then begs the question 18 as to why rule-makers made the change at all.

19         The Notes of the Advisory Committee on 2007 Amendments state: “The 20 language of Rule 81 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil 21 Rules to make them more easily understood and to make style and terminology
22 consistent throughout the rules. These changes are intended to be stylistic only.”

23         The problem with the Advisory Committee’s note is that a change in “style”
24 can also affect meaning, and therefore affect substance. A practitioner can read the 25 amended Rule 81(c)(3)(A) to mean exactly what it says, and can reasonably 26 believe that a jury trial demand that state law did not require to be filed before 27 removal is not required to filed in federal court unless and until ordered by the 28 federal judge. The problem with the note of the Advisory Committee is that in the

1 case of Rule 81(c)(3)(A), the effect of “style” changes is a critical change in
2 meaning; if that meaning is not applied and the result is the loss of the right to trial
3 by jury, the rule has become a trap for the unwary.

4 Many district courts in the Ninth Circuit have acknowledged that Rule 81
5 suffers from poor drafting and tricky wording, but have applied Lewis regardless.
6 In Rump v. Lifeline, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98506 (N.D.Cal. 2009), the court said:

8 The Court recognizes that the federal rules governing jury demands
9 after removal, in conjunction with California's rules permitting a 10 plaintiff to make a jury demand up until the time of trial, creates 11 ambiguity and a trap for the unwary. However, Lewis addressed the 12 interplay between California's rules and Rules 38 and 81, and held that 13 a jury demand must be made within 10 days of removal. Accordingly,
14 because the Court is bound by Lewis, the Court GRANTS
15 defendants' motion and STRIKES plaintiff's jury demand.

16 Id., emphasis added; see also: Gilmore v. O'Daniel Motor Ctr., Inc., 2010 U.S.
17 Dist. LEXIS 57792 (D.Neb. 2010); Cross v. Monumental Life Ins. Co., 2008 U.S.
18 Dist. LEXIS 109235 (D.Ariz. 2008) (“[T]he needless complexity of the removal 19 rule, Rule 81(c), sometimes creates a trap for the unwary.”)

20 Indeed, if Rule 81(c)(3)(A) cannot be relied upon to mean what it says, it is 21 not only a trap for the unwary, it is an unfair trap for the unwary.

22 The problem with altering the “style” of any rule is that it requires changes 23 in language, and changes in language alter meaning, which is a principle that was 24 recognized by the people who changed the rules in 2007. The Judicial Conference 25 Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure keeps online records of its 26 proceedings through the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts in Washington, 27 D.C. The online archives<sup>1</sup> contain the minutes and reports of various rules
28 committee meetings. Attached as Exhibit 1 to this Opposition are copies of

1 excerpts from the June 2, 2006 report of the Civil Rules Advisory Committee on 2 the subject of “style” changes, with portions highlighted for purpose of emphasis.
3 The report refers to various contributors to the process who were highly critical of 4 the “style” changes, including the Committee on Civil Litigation of the U.S.
5 District Court for the Eastern District of New York, whose members wrote:

6       The unanimous judgment of every member of the Committee who 7       expressed a view was that the costs and other disadvantages of the 8       style revision project outweigh its benefits. First, there is the risk of 9       unintended consequences. After finding a number of ambiguities and 10      apparent substantive changes, review of the Burbank-Joseph report
11      found they had uncovered many more – and there was almost no
12      overlap, suggesting that there remain a significant number of 13      unintended consequences that neither we nor they have spotted.
14      Second, any style revisions will bring disruptions. The sheer 15      magnitude of the rewording and subdivision of rules that have become 16      familiar to the courts and the profession in their present form will 17      complicate research and reasoning about the rules for many years to 18      come.

16 See Exhibit 1, attached. The words of the committee from the Eastern District of 17 New York are amazingly prescient in anticipating the current situation with the 18 Plaintiff.

19       In its “Overall Evaluation”, the rules committee asked Professor Stephen B.
20 Burbank and Gregory P. Joseph, Esq. (the “Burbank-Joseph” group) to comment
21 on their working group’s view of the wisdom of the style project. Burbank-Joseph 22 reported that 14 members participated in the final conference call. “Of them, nine 23 believed that the project should not be carried to a conclusion, while five believed 24 that the advantages of adopting the Style Rules outweigh the costs that will be 25 entailed.” See Exhibit 1, attached.

26       The rules committee spoke of “costs that will be entailed”, which in this 27 case, is the cost of losing the right to a jury trial. Forfeiting that Constitutional 28

1 right because of a tricky rule, which cannot be relied upon to mean what it says, is
2 not a cost that can or should be borne by the Plaintiff or any other litigant.

3 Nor is the situation in the Plaintiff's case in any way unique. Dozens of 4 cases are reported from U.S. District Courts across the country where a party was 5 deprived of a right to a jury trial in a case removed from state court based on an 6 interpretation of Rule 81(c)(3)(A). This means attorneys across the land are losing 7 the right to jury trials for their clients in cases that are removed from state court to 8 federal court because the rule is not being interpreted the way it reads.

9 To Plaintiff's knowledge, only one of the many reported decisions on this 10 issue explicitly discusses the change from the present to past tense, and is the only 11 case that squarely addresses the issue raised by this Opposition. In Kay Beer
12 Distrib. v. Energy Brands, Inc., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49792 (E.D. Wisc. 2009), 13 the district judge analyzed and decided the issue as follows:

14 The language of the current Rule 81 is ambiguous. At least one court
15 has observed that the Rule is "poorly crafted." Cross v. Monumental
16 Life Ins. Co., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109235, 2008 WL 2705134, *1
17 (D. Ariz. July 8, 2008). This court agrees. The use of the past tense --
18 "If state law did not require an express demand" -- without any 19 qualification, makes it unclear whether the exception is intended to 20 apply to cases in which a demand for a jury under state law was not 21 yet due when the case was removed, or to cases in which a demand is 22 not required at all. Kay's interpretation of Rule 81(c)(3)(A) thus has 23 some merit. But ultimately, I conclude that Energy's interpretation is 24 correct. Rule 81(c)(3)(A) only applies when the applicable state law 25 does not require a jury demand at all. It has no application when, as in 26 this case, the applicable state law requires an express demand, but the 27 time for making the demand has not yet expired when the case is 28 removed.

25 This is apparent from the language of the Rule prior to its amendment
26 in 2007. Prior to the 2007 amendment to Rule 81, it read:

27 If state law applicable in the court from which the case is removed 28 does not require the parties to make express demands after removal in

1 order to claim trial by jury, they need not make demands after
2 removal unless the court directs that they do so within a specified time
3 if they desire to claim trial by jury.

4 Fed. Rule Civ. P. 81(c) (2006) (amended 2007) (italics added).

5 The Advisory Committee Notes for the 2007 Amendments to Rule 81
6 state that the language of the Rule was amended "as part of the 7 general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily
8 understood and to make style and terminology consistent throughout 9 the rules." The note states that the changes were intended to be "stylistic only."

10 The earlier version of Rule 81(c) was the result of the 1963
11 amendment to the Rules which added the exception in the first place.
12 The Advisory Committee Notes relating to the 1963 Amendment state
13 that the change was meant to avoid unintended waivers of a party's 14 right to a jury trial in cases that are removed to federal court from 15 state courts in which no demand is required. To achieve this purpose, 16 "the amendment provides that where by State law applicable in the 17 court from which the case is removed a party is entitled to jury trial 18 without making an express demand, he need not make a demand after 19 removal." Fed. R. Civ. P. 81 Advisory Committee Note, 1963
20 Amendment. See also 9 Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and 21 Procedure (hereafter Wright & Miller) § 2319 at 228-29 (3d ed.
22 2008). It therefore follows that the exception in Rule 81(c)(3)(A), 23 which relieves a party in a removed case from the obligation to 24 demand a jury trial, applies only where the applicable state law does 25 not require an express demand for a jury trial. Since Wisconsin law
26 does require a jury demand, Rule 81(c)(3)(A)'s exception does not 27 apply.

28 Kay cites Williams v. J.F.K. Int'l Carting Co., 164 F.R.D. 340
(S.D.N.Y. 1996) and Marvel Entm't Group, Inc. v. Arp Films, Inc.,
116 F.R.D. 86 (S.D.N.Y. 1987), in support of its interpretation of Rule
81, but both dealt with actions removed from New York courts. Cases removed from New York court provide little guidance because "the practice in New York falls within a gray area not covered by Rule 81(c)." Cascone v. Ortho Pharm. Corp., 702 F.2d 389, 391 (2d Cir.
1983); see also 9 Wright & Miller § 2319 at 231 ("Many cases

1 removed from New York state courts pose a unique situation." ).
2 Wisconsin law unequivocally requires a demand in order to preserve
3 one's right to a jury trial. I therefore conclude that Rule 81(c)(3)(A) is 4 inapplicable and Kay's demand for a jury trial was untimely under 5 Rule 38(b).

6 Plaintiff respectfully urges that this Court not adopt the reasoning of Kay
7 Beer. The court in Kay Beer did not apply the language of the rule as it reads
8 today, and instead reverted to the former version of the rule. The court stated:
9 "Rule 81(c)(3)(A) only applies when the applicable state law does not require a 10 jury demand at all." (Emphasis added). The only rationale offered by the court in 11 Kay Beer for applying the former version of the rule instead of the current rule is 12 that the Notes of the Advisory Committee state that the 2007 changes to the rules
13 were intended to be "stylistic only". Respectfully, changes that may have been 14 intended to be "stylistic only" can in fact be substantive. The people that adopted 15 the rules openly debated the effect that the "stylistic" changes would have on the 16 substantive law, and ultimately, the rules committee adopted the rules knowing that 17 certain "costs" would be borne by litigants and the court system, including "costs"
18 in the form of substantive rule changes that may not have been intended. The rules 19 committee nonetheless deemed these costs to be acceptable in adopting the new 20 rules. See Exhibit 1, attached. When a "stylistic" change alters the meaning of a 21 rule, this is deemed an acceptable cost, and the Court should apply the rule as it is 22 written. Practitioners also should be able to rely on the rules as written.

23 As an additional consideration, the court in Kay Beer only followed the 24 rationale that the general purpose of the 2007 changes was to effect changes in 25 style and not substance. The court in Kay Beer had no apparent knowledge as to 26 the specific reasons why the change was made from "does not" to "did not". One 27 would have to access the minutes and reports of the style subcommittee of the 28 Civil Rules Advisory Committee to obtain that knowledge. The minutes and reports of the style subcommittee do not appear to be available online or in any

1 readily available alternative source, however, and Plaintiff is unable to provide
2 them to the Court. See Wray Decl., attached.

3 In the absence of the subcommittee minutes and reports, the proper approach 4 is to apply ordinary rules of statutory construction and construe the rule as it is 5 written. By applying the plain language of the rule, one must reasonably conclude 6 that in cases removed from state to federal court, when the applicable state law
7 requires an express jury demand, but the time for making the demand has not yet
8 expired when the case is removed, the time for making a jury demand is to be set 9 by the court.

10 Accordingly, the jury demand filed September 18, 2014 in this action is 11 timely. It respectfully requested that the Defendants' Motion to Strike Plaintiff's 12 Jury Demand be denied.

3                   I, Mark Wray, declare:

4                   1.       My name is Mark Wray. I substituted in as attorney for Plaintiff Tom 5 Gonzales in this action on June 11, 2014. I know the following facts of my 6 personal knowledge and could, if asked, competently testify to the truth of the 7 same under oath.

8                   2.       On September 16, 2014, the Court denied the Defendants’ motion for 9 summary judgment. ECF No. 65.

10                  3.       Upon receiving the order, I reviewed Fed. R. Civ. P. 81(c)(3)(A) and 11 prepared a jury demand which I filed with the Court on September 18, 2014. I also 12 called Defendants’ counsel, Mr. Schwartzer, and asked if he would inquire about 13 obtaining his clients’ permission to consolidate the trial of the two related actions.

14                  4.       On September 26, 2014, Mr. Schwartzer advised me that his clients 15 would not agree to consolidation and that he would be filing a motion to strike the 16 jury demand.

17                  5.       After receiving the Defendants’ motion and re-reading Rule
18 81(c)(3)(A), I reviewed minutes and reports of the Judicial Conference Committee 19 on Rules of Practice and Procedure for the years 2003 through 2007. I also 20 contacted the support staff of the committee in Washington, D.C. I learned there 21 are six members of the support staff, headed by their chief, Jonathan Rose, and 22 they are busy with six different committees. Over a period of days and follow-up
23 phone calls, I attempted to find out whether anyone on the support staff has access
24 to any minutes and reports of the style subcommittee of the Advisory Committee
25 on Civil Rules during the years leading up to the 2007 rule changes. I spoke to Mr.
26 Rose specifically about this subject, explaining my interest in knowing the genesis 27 of the change from “does not” to “did not”. Although I followed up several times

Re: Report of the Civil Rules Advisory Committee

Introduction

The Civil Rules Advisory Committee met in Washington, D.C., on May 22-23, 2006. Draft minutes of the meeting are attached.

Part I of this report presents action items. Subpart A recommends approval for adoption of two sets of proposals. The first is Civil Rule 5.2, the Civil Rules version of the E-Government Rules developed under direction by the Standing Committee Subcommittee on the E-Government Act. The second is the package of Style amendments — Style Rules 1-86; Style-Substance amendments to Rules 4(k), 9(h), 11(a), 14(b), 16(c)(1), 26(g)(1), 30(b), 31, 40, 71.1, and 78; Style Forms; and the Style versions of the amended rules on electronic discovery now pending in Congress and scheduled to take effect on December 1, 2006 (Rules 16, 26, 33, 34, 37, and 45).

Subpart I B recommends approval for publication of new Rule 62.1 on indicative rulings and amendments to Rules 13(f), 15(a)(amended pleadings), and 48 (jury polling). The recommendation is to publish these proposals — along with the modest amendment of Rule 8(c) approved for publication at the January meeting — at a later date, presumably August, 2007, when they can be included in a package with other proposals.

Part II of this report presents information items describing the projects that are being developed for further consideration.

Rule 81(b)-(c)

(b) Scire Facias and Mandamus. The writs of scire facias and mandamus are abolished. Relief heretofore available by mandamus or scire facias may be obtained by appropriate action or by appropriate motion under the practice prescribed in these rules.	(b) Scire Facias and Mandamus. The writs of scire facias and mandamus are abolished. Relief previously available through them may be obtained by appropriate action or motion under these rules.
(c) Removed Actions. These rules apply to civil actions removed to the United States district courts from the state courts and govern procedure after removal.	(c) Removed Actions. (1) Applicability. These rules apply to a civil action after it is removed from a state court.
Repleading is not necessary unless the court so orders. In a removed action in which the defendant has not answered, the defendant shall answer or present the other defenses or objections available under these rules within 20 days after the receipt through service or otherwise of a copy of the initial pleading setting forth the claim for relief upon which the action or proceeding is based, or within 20 days after the service of summons upon such initial pleading, then filed, or within 5 days after the filing of the petition for removal, whichever period is longest. If at the time of removal all necessary pleadings have been served, a party entitled to trial by jury under Rule 38 shall be accorded it, if the party's demand therefor is served within 10 days after the petition for removal is filed if the party is the petitioner, or if not the petitioner within 10 days after service on the party of the notice of filing the petition.	(2) Further Pleading. After removal, repleading is unnecessary unless the court orders it. A defendant who did not answer before removal must answer or present other defenses or objections under these rules within the longest of these periods: (A) 20 days after receiving — through service or otherwise — a copy of the initial pleading stating the claim for relief; (B) 20 days after being served with the summons for an initial pleading on file at the time of service; or (C) 5 days after the notice of removal is filed.
A party who, prior to removal, has made an express demand for trial by jury in accordance with state law, need not make a demand after removal. If state law applicable in the court from which the case is removed does not require the parties to make express demands in order to claim trial by jury, they need not make demands after removal unless the court directs that they do so within a specified time if they desire to claim trial by jury. The court may make this direction on its own motion and shall do so as a matter of course at the request of any party. The failure of a party to make demand as directed constitutes a waiver by that party of trial by jury.	(3) Demand for a Jury Trial. (A) As Affected by State Law. A party who, before removal, expressly demanded a jury trial in accordance with state law need not renew the demand after removal. If the state law did not require an express demand for a jury trial, a party need not make one after removal unless the court orders the parties to do so within a specified time. The court must so order at a party's request and may so order on its own. A party who fails to make a demand when so ordered waives a jury trial. (B) Under Rule 38. If all necessary pleadings have been served at the time of removal, a party entitled to a jury trial under Rule 38 must be given one if the party serves a demand within 10 days after: (i) it files a notice of removal; or (ii) it is served with a notice of removal filed by another party.

Summary of Comments

The written comments on Style Rules 1-86, the Style-Substance Rules, and the Style Forms, are described in the Summary of Comments. The hearing on November 18, 2005, and discussion at the Committee meeting that followed, are described in the Notes on the meeting.

SUMMARY OF COMMENTS: STYLE RULES

(Two of the most detailed sets of comments are identified without repeating the full CV designation each time. One set, 05-CV-22, was submitted by Professor Stephen B. Burbank and Gregory P. Joseph, Esq., on the basis of work done by a 21-person working group, is identified simply as "Burbank-Joseph." Similarly, 05-CV-008, submitted by the Committee on Civil Litigation of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, is identified as "EDNY.")

The summaries are at times embroidered by responses. Although this approach is new to the task of summarizing comments, the Style Project presents some issues that may benefit from counterpoint.

Overall Project

Hon. W. Eugene Davis, 05-CV-007: Judge Davis chaired the Criminal Rules Advisory Committee during the style revision project. He opposed the project while the decision to go ahead was deliberated, fearing that "we would make inadvertent, substantive changes or create ambiguities that would result in wasteful, satellite litigation." But the fears "turned out to be almost totally unfounded. We have experienced minimal litigation over the meaning of the style changes. Judge Will Garwood, who was Chair of the Appellate Rules Committee during their style revision project, also tells me that satellite litigation over the meaning of the changes to those rules has not been a problem." "I have every reason to believe that the concern about significant satellite litigation over the meaning of the changes to the Civil Rules will turn out to be just as unfounded as it was with the Criminal Rules."

EDNY: Review of the Burbank-Joseph comments led to an independent consideration of the costs of the style enterprise. "[T]he unanimous judgment of every member of the Committee who expressed a view" was that "the costs and other disadvantages of the style revision project outweigh its benefits." First, there is the risk of unintended consequences. After finding a number of ambiguities and apparent substantive changes, review of the Burbank-Joseph report found that they had uncovered many more — and that there was almost no overlap, suggesting that "there remain a significant number of unintended consequences that neither we nor [they] have spotted." Second, any style revision will bring "disruptions." "[T]he sheer magnitude of the rewording and subdivision of rules that have become familiar to the courts and the profession in their present form will complicate research and reasoning about the rules for many years to come." Third, courts and the profession will be so occupied "in digesting the style revisions" that it will be more difficult to accomplish desirable substantive rules revisions. It would be better to implement style revisions of particular rules or groups of rules "as the need for substantive changes in those rules or groups of rules becomes apparent."

Prof. Bradley Scott Shannon, 05-CV-009: "The non-substantive problems associated with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure are sufficiently great so as to warrant revision. Overall, the Advisory Committee has done a fine job in this regard, and the restyled rules as proposed, whatever their flaws, are superior to the Rules as they currently exist."

Plain Language Action and Information Network (PLAIN), 05-CV-010: "This draft is a tremendous improvement over the current version. It will be easier to use, and thus should save time and effort, and achieve a higher degree of conformance with the procedures it outlines."

Hon. Peter D. Keisler, Assistant Attorney General, 05-CV-011: In the judgment of the United States Department of Justice "the revisions should help simplify and clarify the text of many of the Rules so that practitioners can better understand and apply them." Attorneys in the Criminal Division and in the Civil Division's appellate staff have found that the style changes in the Criminal Rules and Appellate Rules "have been positive and beneficial. the Department strongly supports the current initiative to restyle the Civil Rules * * *."

Susan Kleimann, President Kleimann Communications Group, 05-CV-012: The style amendments "will make it easier for judges, lawyers, and the public to find the information they need, understand what they find, and be able to use that information effectively."

Lawyers for Civil Justice, 05-CV-014: "Plain language is critical to clear understanding and our reading of the Style Revisions convinces us that lawyers and litigants will save lots of time and trouble in reading and interpreting these rules, if they are adopted. * * * Increased clarity will bring about easier and faster understanding of the Rules and dealings among lawyers will be simplified and facilitated." LCJ disagrees with those who believe the changes are not worth the effort. "Similar claims were made about the re-styling of the Criminal and Appellate Rules, but those have been on the books for some time and appear to have worked well in practice."

John Beisner, Esq. 05-CV-015: The restyled rules attempt to minimize the frequent debates about the meanings of even familiar Civil Rules, "to ensure that our federal judicial rules provide a clear roadmap to litigating in our federal courts — rather than construct a trap for the unwary." Simplifying the rules "will also increase attorney efficiency and even has the potential to reduce ever-escalating attorneys' fees. One study conducted in Australia found that on average, lawyers are able to arrive at a solution 30 percent faster when they consult plain versions of legislation versus traditionally styled legislation. See Law Reform Comm'n of Victoria, Plain English and the Law 69-70 (1987)." "[T]he restyling * * * reflects a broadly-based, overdue realization by public and private entities that simpler is better."

Some comments suggest that the Style Project will interfere with the more important need "to rewrite the rules for 21st Century legal practice. * * * I believe that these concerns are ill-founded." There is no apparent present plan to convene a "Constitutional convention" to rewrite the Civil Rules from scratch. The wisdom of any such project is questionable. Some of the rules are controversial, but gradational change is better than wholesale change. And in any event, a sweeping revision of the whole system would take many years, if not decades. "It makes no sense to force attorneys to litigate under potentially confusing rules for several years simply because a more ambitious project is being planned that could easily take many years to implement." Indeed, by making the rules clearer the style project will save attorneys time, not waste their time by forcing them to relearn a new set of rules and then put aside the new learning for a still newer set of rules.

Hon. Thomas S. Zilly, Advisory Committee on Bankruptcy Rules, 05-CV-016: "The restyling significantly improves the Civil Rules both as to their clarity and readability."

Donald P. Byrne, Esq., 05-CV-017: After a career writing FAA regulations as Assistant Chief Counsel for Regulations, finds the revised rules "a great improvement in communication, especially for lawyers like me who refer to the Civil Rules only occasionally. They're easier to read, digest, and remember." It was a challenge to get through the original rules. "The proposed style revisions make the ride much smoother and the road map much clearer."

ABA Section of Litigation, 05-CV-018: The Litigation Section Council has not taken a position on the Style Rules, but notes the honor and privilege of enjoying the opportunity to participate in the style process through two members assigned to assist in the project and through the Section's liaison to the Advisory Committee. The Committee responded to countless questions raised by these Section representatives.

Committee on United States Courts, State Bar of Michigan, 05-CV-019: "The amendments will enhance the readability, internal consistency and organization of the Federal Rules."

Hon. Bill Wilson, 05-CV-020: Writes in response to the doubts expressed by the EDNY committee. Judge Wilson was a member of the Style Subcommittee when the restyling of the Criminal Rules began. The same objections to restyling were voiced then. "The legal profession has traditionally been very conservative about changes (style or substantive) to any rules with which members of the profession have worked. I am satisfied that plain, simple language is to be preferred." "We need rules so plain that practicing lawyers can understand them. In fact, we ought to make them so plain that even judges can understand them. I urge full steam ahead on this restyling project and others."

Patricia Lee Refo, Esq., and Scott J. Atlas, Esq., 05-CV-021: Scott Atlas and Patricia Refo are past chairs of the ABA Section of Litigation and both were members of the Burbank-Joseph Committee. "In our view, the potential benefits outweigh any conceivable transaction costs. The revised rules represent a significant improvement over the existing rules in terms of resolving ambiguities to conform to clear case law and using plain English so that younger and less experienced federal court practitioners can more easily comprehend the text. We have long thought that the language used in the original rules has outlived its usefulness and that practitioners would be better served by a more straightforward text. The Restyling Project accomplishes this goal."

Burbank-Joseph: "[A] number of members favored continuing the effort." They thought the restyling of other sets of rules had been successful. They agreed that there will be some unintended changes in meaning, but noted that this Committee's comments and others will reduce the number. They conclude that such disadvantages are outweighed by the advantages in greater accessibility of the restyled rules, "particularly to younger and less experienced practitioners." But "[a] greater number of participants were either mildly or strongly negative." The Committee found a number of serious problems, and there may be many more that have not been identified. Whatever benefits may be realized "will pale in comparison with the transaction costs, not just those engendered by uncertainty about a change in meaning, but those generated by the need to learn the new rules (and pay for the new treatises), together with the additional transaction costs that will follow when local rules and standing orders are changed to conform to the restyled rules." Beyond these costs, restyling "might retard or make more difficult the more important task of determining whether we have an appropriate set of rules for litigation in the twenty-first century." It would be better to include restyling as one component of the substantive enterprise — "the bar would not tolerate having to relearn the rules more than once in a generation." Finally, Burbank and Joseph themselves are concerned with problems that "have negative implications for access to court (e.g., Rule 68) and/or for the protection of individual rights (e.g., Rule 65) * * *."

Federal Magistrate Judges Assn., 05-CV-024: "The FMJA supports the proposed restyling of the Civil Rules. The proposed style revisions improve the Civil Rules both as to their clarity and readability."

Draft Summary: Civil Rules Hearing & Meeting
 November 18, 2005

Rather than revert to the present rule, which refers only to stenographic reporting, there would be no harm in simply dropping Rule 80. Others suggested that perhaps Rule 80 should be retained, to be reconsidered in the context of a broader project to review the Civil Rules provisions on evidence for better integration with the Evidence Rules. It was further noted that Rule 80 should not be confused with possible evidentiary uses of deposition testimony — it addresses only testimony "at a trial or hearing." That might include an administrative hearing, or a state-court trial or hearing. The problems of various recording methods may not be as acute as they would be if deposition testimony were included. At the end, Mr. Joseph suggested that Style Rule 80 would be appropriate if it refers only to stenographically recorded testimony.

Rules 72, 73: Professor Burbank noted that Professor Linda Silberman, who was involved in drafting the original versions of Rules 72 and 73, was directed to follow the language of the magistrate-judge statute, and still thinks that is a good idea. Perhaps style conventions should not trump fealty to the statutory language here. To be sure, it was a new statute at the time, and one purpose of adhering to the statutory language may have been to serve a "teaching" purpose. They may have wanted to be sure they were not changing anything. That purpose may not be as important now. If we can be sure that there are no possible changes of meaning, and no significant transaction costs arising from transitional confusion or efforts to create confusion, the Style changes may be appropriate. So, it was noted, the Criminal Rules have adhered to the Civil Style drafts.

Rule 36(b): Professor Burbank noted that the Style-Substance proposal to amend Rule 36(b) presents a problem. The present rule permits amendment of an admission "[s]ubject to the provisions of Rule 16 governing amendment of a pre-trial order." Present Rule 16(e) states two different things about amending a pretrial order. First it provides generally that an order reciting the action taken at a Rule 16 conference "shall control the subsequent course of the action unless modified by a subsequent order." That provision does not establish any standard for modification; it simply recognizes that modification may occur. The second provision is that an order following a final pretrial conference "shall be modified only to prevent manifest injustice." The Style Rules divide these two provisions between Style Rule 16(d) and (e). The Style-Substance proposal is to limit Rule 36(b) to an order permitting withdrawal or amendment of an admission "that has not been incorporated in a pretrial order." The result is that there is no standard for withdrawal or amendment of an admission that has been incorporated in a pretrial order before the final pretrial order. The appropriate rule instead should be that the Rule 36(b) standard governs withdrawal or amendment except as to an admission that has been incorporated in a final pretrial order. Withdrawal or amendment of an admission incorporated in a final pretrial order should be governed by the more demanding standard of Style Rule 16(e).

Overall Evaluation: A Committee Member asked Professor Burbank and Mr. Joseph to comment on their written summary of the working group's views on the wisdom of undertaking the Style Project. Professor Burbank replied that the group was divided. Fourteen members participated in the final conference call. Of them, nine believed that the project should not be carried to a conclusion, while five believed that the advantages of adopting the Style Rules outweigh the costs that will be entailed. The strength of their convictions varied. Some thought the goals of the project are admirable, but were concerned that there are not insignificant problems even in light of the perception that the Styled Appellate Rules and Criminal Rules work. The problems that can be identified now can be fixed now. But there will be other problems that are not identified. And there will be transaction costs as lawyers attempt to bend the Style Rules by arguing for unintended changes of meaning. In addition, there is an opportunity cost in losing the occasion for addressing the entire corpus of rules by asking whether the present Federal Rules of Civil Procedure embody the right procedure for the 21st Century.

ORDER

This case arises out of the alleged breach of a settlement agreement that was part of a confirmation plan in a Chapter 11 bankruptcy action. Pending before the Court are a Motion to Reconsider (ECF No. 68) and a Motion to Strike Jury Demand (ECF No. 69). For the reasons given herein, the Court denies the motion to reconsider and grants the motion to strike jury demand.

I. FACTS AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

This is the second action in this Court by Plaintiff Tom Gonzales concerning his entitlement to a fee under a Confirmation Order the undersigned entered over ten years ago while sitting as a bankruptcy judge.

A. The Previous Case

On December 7, 2000, Plaintiff loaned $41.5 million to Desert Land, LLC and Desert

1 Oasis Apartments, LLC to finance their acquisition and/or development of land (“Parcel A”) in 2 Las Vegas, Nevada. The loan was secured by a deed of trust. On May 31, 2002, Desert Land
3 and Desert Oasis Apartments, as well as Desert Ranch, LLC (collectively, the “Desert Entities”),
4 each filed for bankruptcy, and the undersigned jointly administered those three bankruptcies
5 while sitting as a bankruptcy judge. The court confirmed the second amended plan, and the 6 Confirmation Order included a finding that a settlement had been reached under which Gonzales
7 would extinguish his note and reconvey his deed of trust, Gonzales and another party would
8 convey their fractional interests in Parcel A to Desert Land so that Desert Land would own 100%
9 of Parcel A, Gonzales would receive Desert Ranch’s 65% in interest in another property, and 10 Gonzales would receive $10 million if Parcel A were sold or transferred after 90 days (the 11 “Parcel Transfer Fee”). Gonzales appealed the Confirmation Order, and the Bankruptcy
12 Appellate Panel affirmed, except as to a provision subordinating Gonzales’s interest in the Parcel
13 Transfer Fee to up to $45 million in financing obtained by the Desert Entities.

14 In 2011, Gonzales sued Desert Land, Desert Oasis Apartments, Desert Oasis Investments, 15 LLC, Specialty Trust, Specialty Strategic Financing Fund, LP, Eagle Mortgage Co., and Wells
16 Fargo (as trustee for a mortgage-backed security) in state court for: (1) declaratory judgment that 17 a transfer of Parcel A had occurred entitling him to the Parcel Transfer Fee; (2) declaratory 18 judgment that the lender defendants in that action knew of the bankruptcy proceedings and the 19 requirement of the Parcel Transfer Fee; (3) breach of contract (for breach of the Confirmation 20 Order); (4) breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing (same); (5) judicial 21 foreclosure against Parcel A under Nevada law; and (6) injunctive relief. Defendants removed 22 that case to the Bankruptcy Court. The Bankruptcy Court recommended moving to withdraw the 23 reference, because the undersigned issued the underlying Confirmation Order while sitting as a 24 bankruptcy judge. One or more parties so moved, and the Court granted the motion. The Court
25 dismissed the second and fifth causes of action and later granted certain defendants’ counter-

1 motion for summary judgment as against the remaining claims. Plaintiff asked the Court to 2 reconsider and to clarify which, if any, of its claims remained, and defendants asked the Court to 3 certify its summary judgment order under Rule 54(b) and to enter judgment in their favor on all
4 claims. The Court denied the motion to reconsider, clarified that it had intended to rule on all
5 claims, and certified the summary judgment order for immediate appeal. The Court of Appeals
6 affirmed, ruling that the Parcel Transfer Fee had not been triggered based on the allegations in 7 that case, and that Plaintiff had no lien against Parcel A.

8 B. The Present Case

9 In the present case, also removed from state court, Plaintiff recounts the Confirmation
10 Order and the Parcel Transfer Fee. (See Compl. ¶¶ 10–14, Apr. 10, 2013, ECF No. 1, at 11).
11 Plaintiff also recounts the history of the ‘613 Case. (See id. ¶¶ 17–21). Plaintiff alleges that 12 Defendant Shotgun Nevada Investments, LLC (“Shotgun”) began making loans to Desert Entities
13 for the development of Parcel A between 2012 and January 2013 despite its awareness of the 14 Confirmation Order and Parcel A transfer fee provision therein. (See id. ¶¶ 22–23). Plaintiff sued
15 Shotgun, Shotgun Creek Las Vegas, LLC, Shotgun Creek Investments, LLC, and Wayne M.
16 Perry for intentional interference with contract, intentional interference with prospective 17 economic advantage, and unjust enrichment based upon their having provided financing to the 18 Desert Entities to develop Parcel A. Defendants removed and moved for summary judgment,
19 arguing that the preclusion of certain issues decided in the ‘613 Case necessarily prevented 20 Plaintiffs from prevailing in the present case. The Court granted that motion as a motion to 21 dismiss, with leave to amend.

22 Plaintiff filed the Amended Complaint (“AC”). (See Am. Compl., Aug. 20, 2013, ECF 23 No. 28). Plaintiff alleges that the Confirmation Order permitted Parcel A to be used as collateral 24 for up to $25,000,000 in mortgages of Parcel A itself or as collateral for a mortgage securing the 25 purchase of real property subject to the FLT Option if the proceeds were used only for the

1 purchase of that real property, but that any encumbrance of Parcel A outside of these parameters
2 would trigger the Parcel Transfer Fee. (See id. ¶¶ 15–16). Various Shotgun entities made
3 additional loans to the Desert Entities in 2012 and 2013 “related to the development of Parcel
4 A.” (Id. ¶¶ 25–26). Multiple Shotgun entities have also invested in SkyVue Las Vegas, LLC
5 (“SkyVue”), the company that owns the entities that own Parcel A. (Id. ¶ 27). Plaintiff alleges
6 that the reason Perry, the principal of the Shotgun entities, did not document his $10 million
7 investment was to “avoid evidence of a transfer,” and thus the triggering of the Parcel Transfer
8 Fee. (See id. ¶ 29).

9 Defendants moved for summary judgment, and Plaintiff moved to compel discovery
10 under Rule 56(d). The Court struck the conspiracy and declaratory judgment claims from the 11 AC, because Plaintiff had no leave to add them. The Court otherwise denied the motion for 12 summary judgment and granted the motion to compel discovery, although the Court noted that 13 the intentional interference with prospective economic advantage claim (but not the intentional 14 interference with contractual relations claim) was legally insufficient. Defendants again moved 15 for summary judgment after further discovery and filed a motion in limine asking the Court to 16 exclude any testimony of witnesses or documents not disclosed in discovery. The Court denied
17 the motion for summary judgment because the allegations in the AC concerned events
18 subsequent to the events alleged in the ‘613 Case, and Plaintiff had submitted evidence sufficient
19 to create a genuine issue of material fact for trial as to the sole remaining claim for intentional
20 interference with contractual relations. The Court denied the motion in limine because it
21 identified no particular evidence to exclude but simply asked the Court to enforce the evidence 22 rules at trial as a general matter.

23 Defendants have asked the Court to reconsider their latest motion for summary judgment
24 and to strike Plaintiff’s recently filed jury demand.

25 ///

1 II. DISCUSSION

2 A. Motion to Reconsider

3 Defendants argue that the Court noted no timely reply had been filed, but that they in fact
4 filed a reply that was timely under a stipulation to extend time. The Court has examined the 5 reply, and it does not negate the genuine issue of material fact Plaintiff showed in his response.

6 B. Motion to Strike Jury Demand

7 Plaintiff did not demand a jury trial in the Complaint, (see Compl., ECF No. 1, at 11), or 8 in the AC, (see Am. Compl., ECF No. 28). Defendants did not demand a jury trial in the Answer
9 to the Complaint, (see Answer, ECF No. 4), or in the Answer to the AC, (see Answer, ECF No.
10 30). A jury must be demanded by serving the other parties with a written demand no later than 11 fourteen days after service of the last pleading directed to the issue for which a jury trial is 12 demanded. Fed. R. Civ. P. 38(b)(1). The last such pleading in this case was the Answer to the 13 AC, which was served upon Plaintiff via ECF on September 3, 2013. (See Cert. Service, ECF
14 No. 30, at 8). The deadline for any party to demand a jury trial was therefore Tuesday, 15 September 17, 2013. The Jury Demand at ECF No. 67 was served upon Defendants via ECF on 16 September 18, 2014, over a year after the deadline. (See Cert. Service, ECF No. 67, at 3).
17 Defendants are therefore correct that the demand is untimely and should be stricken.

18 In response, Plaintiff notes that in removal cases such as the present one, an express jury 19 demand made before removal that is sufficient under state law need not be renewed after 20 removal, and that where state law requires no express jury demand, a party need not make such a 21 demand after removal unless specially ordered to do so by the court within a specified time. See
22 Fed. R. Civ. P. 81(c)(3)(A). Plaintiff argues that Nevada law requires a jury demand “not later 23 than the time of the entry of the order first setting the case for trial.” Nev. R. Civ. P. 38(b).
24 Plaintiff argues that because a jury demand was not yet due under state law at the time the case 25 was removed, he need not make such a demand after removal unless ordered to do so by the

1 court within a specified time, and the Court has not issued such an order in this case.

2 Rule 81 waives the requirements of Rule 38 where an express jury demand has been
3 made under state law before removal. Plaintiff does not claim to have made any express jury
4 demand before removal, however. It is also true that where state law does not require an express
5 jury demand, none need be made after removal. The questions here are whether and when a 6 party must make a jury demand in federal court after removal in cases where state law does in 7 fact require a jury demand, but where it was not yet due under state law at the time of removal.
8 In such cases, is the jury demand requirement under Rule 38 negated, as is the case where state
9 law requires no demand at all?

10 Plaintiff candidly admits that the Court of Appeals has ruled that in such cases a jury
11 demand must be made in accordance with Rule 38, and that district courts typically follow that 12 rule. See Lewis v. Time, Inc., 710 F.2d 549, 556 (9th Cir. 1983). However, Plaintiff also notes
13 that the rule at the time of Lewis read, “If state law applicable in the court from which the case is 14 removed does not require the parties to make express demands in order to claim trial by jury . . .
15 .” See id. (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 81(c) (1983)) (emphasis added). Plaintiff argues that the result 16 should be different today, because the rule was amended in relevant part in 2007 to read, “If the 17 state law did not require an express demand for a jury trial . . . .” Fed. R. Civ. P. 81(c)(3)(A)
18 (emphasis added). Plaintiff argues that because the current rule uses the past tense as to the 19 requirement to make a jury demand under state law when viewed from the point of removal, that 20 there is no requirement to make a jury demand in federal court if none was yet due under state
21 law at the time of removal. Plaintiff admits that the 2007 amendments to the rules were 22 “intended to be stylistic only,” see Fed. R. Civ. P. 81 advisory committee’s note, but argues that 23 the stylistic change is an “unfair trap for the unwary.”

24 The Court agrees with the district courts that continue to enforce the Lewis rule. Rule 81
25 is not a trap for the unwary. Even if that had been a fair argument when Rule 81 was newly

1 amended, as Plaintiff notes, district courts, including those in this district, have consistently
2 enforced the Lewis rule under Rule 81 as amended. See Nascimento v. Wells Fargo Bank, No.
3 2:11-cv-1049, 2011 WL 4500410, at *2 (D. Nev. Sept. 27, 2011) (Mahan, J.); Kaldor v. Skolnik,
4 No. 3:10-cv-529, 2010 WL 5441999, at *2 (D. Nev. Dec. 28, 2010) (Hicks, J.). And the new 5 language of the rule is not particularly confusing. The Rule 38 demand is required unless the 6 state law “did not require an express demand,” not only if the state law “did not yet require an 7 express demand to have been served at the time of removal.” The latter reading of the rule is 8 improbable. The committee’s notes make clear that such a meaning was not intended, as the 9 amendment was only for style. The authors of the rule surely knew how to distinguish the 10 concepts of whether and when, and they did not add any language reasonably invoking the 11 concept of timing into the amendment of Rule 81(c)(3)(A).

12 Moreover, Plaintiff’s own Case Management Report of July 30, 2013 notes that “A jury 13 trial has not been requested” under paragraph VIII, entitled “JURY TRIAL.” (See Case Mgmt.
14 Report 6, July 30, 2013, ECF No. 25). If Plaintiff had truly been under the impression that the 15 right to a jury trial had been preserved under Rule 81(c)(3)(A) because no jury demand was yet 16 due at the time of removal, he surely would have noted his expectation of a jury trial and/or 17 explained his position that no jury demand was necessary; he would not have simply noted that 18 no jury trial had been requested and left it at that. Plaintiff’s “unfair trap for the unwary”
19 argument in this case is therefore not made in good faith, even if the argument could avail a 20 litigant in an appropriate case.

1646 17. Rule 54(d)(2)(B) – 23-CV-L

1647 Magistrate Judge Patricia Barksdale proposes that the Advisory Committee consider a rule 1648 amendment to deal with a timing problem in handling fee awards under 42 U.S.C. § 406(b). She 1649 calls attention to local rule changes being considered in the M.D. Fla. that might be a model for an 1650 amendment to Rule 54(d)(2)(B)(i), which requires generally that a motion for attorney’s fees must 1651 be made “no later than 14 days after the entry of judgment.” Here is the local rule proposal:

1652 (e) ATTORNEY’S FEE IN A SOCIAL SECURITY CASE AFTER REMAND. No later than fourteen 1653 days after receipt of a “close out” letter, a lawyer requesting an attorney’s fee, payable from 1654 withheld benefits, must move for the fee and include in the motion:

- 1655 (1) the agency letter specifying the withheld benefits;
- 1656 (2) any contingency fee agreement; and
- 1657 (3) proof that the proposed fee is reasonable.

1658 The basic problem arises in connection with judicial review of decisions by the Social 1659 Security Administration (SSA) denying benefits. The fee award for in-court work by the attorney
1660 ordinarily depends on the outcome of further proceedings before the SSA because the normal relief
1661 in court for a successful plaintiff under 42 U.S. § 405(g) is remand to the SSA for further 1662 proceedings, and the attorney fee award under § 406(b) must be “reasonable” but is limited to “25
1663 percent of the total of the past-due benefits to which the claimant is entitled by reason of such 1664 judgment.” When the court orders a remand, that depends on the eventual outcome of those 1665 proceedings after remand.

1666 As spelled out in the Committee Note to Rule 54(b)(2), the 14-day deadline assures that 1667 the opposing party knows of the attorney fee claim before the time to appeal expires, but that does 1668 not seem to be important frequently in court remands of SSA denials of benefits. Another goal was 1669 to provide “an opportunity for the court to resolve fee disputes shortly after trial, while the services 1670 performed are freshly in mind.” That objective might be served by the deadline, but since the 1671 statutory limit on the fee award can’t be known until further proceedings before the SSA it hardly 1672 seems dispositive.

1673 Review of SSA benefits decisions occupied much Advisory Committee time and energy 1674 recently, so some background on that effort seems in order. In 2017, the Administrative 1675 Conference of the U.S. made a proposal that explicit rules be developed for civil actions under 42
1676 U.S.C. § 405(g) to review denial of individual disability claims under the Social Security Act.

1677 The ACUS recommendation was based in large part on a 180-page study by Professors
1678 Jonah Gelbach and David Marcus entitled A Study of Social Security Disability Litigation in the 1679 Federal Courts. That study was very thorough and raised questions about many aspects of the 1680 SSA’s internal processes in reviewing such claims. But it also suggested that the ordinary Civil 1681 Rules did not work well for what were essentially appellate proceedings, though conducted in the 1682 district court.

1683 The Standing Committee decided that the Civil Rules Committee should address the ACUS
1684 proposal. On the day before the Advisory Committee’s November 2017 meeting, an informal 1685 subcommittee met with representatives of SSA and of claimant organizations. At that meeting, 1686 SSA representatives strongly urged the adoption of uniform national rules, in part because SSA
1687 attorneys have to handle cases in a number of courts or regions and the procedures may differ
1688 significantly from one court to the next. For details, see Minutes of the Nov. 7, 2017, Advisory 1689 Committee meeting at 7-12.

1690 A major difficulty in SSA benefits decisions was the amount of time the SSA takes to 1691 resolve claims. It was recognized during the informal meeting a national rule for in-court handling
1692 of appeals would not address those problems, which had been detailed in the Gelbach/Marcus
1693 report. So in-court procedural difficulties did not seem to be a big part of the overall SSA 1694 claims-processing activity.

1695 But it was also clear that because there are so many such proceedings – about 18,000 per 1696 year – and that SSA review usually differs in kind from other administrative review matters before
1697 the district courts, which are also much less numerous. Furthermore, these in-court proceedings
1698 very frequently end with a remand to the SSA for further proceedings, presenting the timing
1699 difficulty raised by this submission. Considerable grounds for specialized treatment appeared to 1700 exist.

1701 Moreover, one potential upside of a national rule for SSA appeals was that it could simplify 1702 service of the complaint on the SSA. Some districts were experimenting with that. But it was also 1703 noted that designing rules for only one type of case runs against the grain of the transsubstantive 1704 federal rules. There are exceptions, however, including the rules for § 2255 proceedings and the 1705 provisions of Supplemental Rule G for forfeiture proceedings.

1706 A formal Subcommittee was formed, with Judge Sara Lioi as Chair. The SSA continued to 1707 press for broad and detailed national rules. In particular, it urged the following as a model for a 1708 rule on attorney fee awards:

- 1709 (c) PETITIONS FOR ATTORNEY’S FEES UNDER 42 U.S.C. § 406(b).
- 1710 (1) Timing of petition. Plaintiff’s counsel may file a petition for attorney’s fees 1711 under 42 U.S.C. § 406(b) no later than 60 days after the date of the final 1712 notice of award sent to Plaintiff’s counsel of record at the conclusion of 1713 Defendant’s past due benefit calculation stating the amount withheld for 1714 attorney’s fees. The court will assume counsel representing Plaintiff in 1715 federal court received any notice of award as of the same date that Plaintiff 1716 received the notice, unless counsel establishes otherwise.
- 1717 (2) Service of Petition. Plaintiff’s counsel must serve a petition for fees on 1718 Defendant and must attest that counsel has informed Plaintiff of the 1719 request.
- 1720 (3) Contents of petition. The petition for fees must include:

- 1721 (A) a copy of the final notice of award showing the amount of retroactive 1722 benefits payable to Plaintiff (and to any auxiliaries, if applicable), 1723 including the amount withheld for attorney’s fees, and, if the date
 1724 that counsel received the notice is different from the date provided 1725 on the notice, evidence of the date counsel received the notice;
- 1726 (B) an itemization of the time expended by counsel representing 1727 Plaintiff in federal court, including a statement as to the effective 1728 hourly rate (as calculated by dividing the total amount requested by 1729 number of hours expended);
- 1730 (C) a copy of any fee agreement between Plaintiff and counsel;
- 1731 (D) statements as to whether counsel:
- 1732 (i) has sought, or intends to seek, fees under 42 U.S.C. § 406(a) for 1733 work performed on behalf of Plaintiff at the administrative level;
- 1734 (ii) the award to any other representative who has sought, or who 1735 may intend to seek, fees under 42 U.S.C. § 406(a);
- 1736 (iii) was awarded attorney’s fees under 42 U.S.C. § 2412, the Equal 1737 Access to Justice Act, in connection with the case and, if so, the 1738 amount of such fees; and
- 1739 (iv) will return the lesser of the § 2412 and § 406(b) awards to 1740 Plaintiff upon receipt of the § 406(b) award.
- 1741 (E) any other information the court would reasonably need to assess the 1742 petition.
- 1743 (4) Response. Defendant may file a response within 30 days of service of the 1744 petition, but such response is not required.

1745 In the agenda book for the November 2018 Advisory Committee meeting, the following 1746 report appears on p. 223:

1747 SSA reports that the general Civil Rules provisions work well for awarding fees
 1748 under the Equal Access to Justice Act. But there are serious difficulties with the 1749 procedure for awarding fees under § 406(b). These fees, which come out of the 1750 award of benefits, are for attorney services in the court. The award is made by the 1751 court, not SSA. The substantive calculation can be difficult, including integration
 1752 with fees awarded by the Commissioner for work in the administrative proceedings
 1753 under § 406(a) and fees awarded by the court under the Equal Access to Justice
 1754 Act. Rule text addressing those substantive issues does not seem appropriate, even 1755 if the substantive rules are clearly established.

1756 It may be possible, however, to address the problem of timing a motion for an award
1757 by the court under § 406(b). In a great many cases the result of the court’s judgment
1758 is a remand to SSA for further proceedings. The Civil Rule 54(d)(2) timing 1759 requirements geared to judgment do not fit well with a motion that cannot become 1760 ripe until conclusion of the administrative proceedings. There are serious problems.

1761 To recognize that there are serious problems, however, is not to agree that they can 1762 be resolved by a new court rule. There is a mess, but it originates primarily outside 1763 the Civil Rules. Attempts to clean it up would be difficult and might make matters 1764 worse.

1765 Despite the sentiment that these problems may be too varied and too complicated
1766 to address by rule, the Subcommittee concluded that the topic should be carried 1767 forward for further consideration.

1768 The SSA Subcommittee spent two years developing its proposal for Supplemental Rules.
1769 Those eight Supplemental Rules in relatively brief compass set out a specialized sequence of 1770 actions for “an action under 42 U.S.C. § 405(g) for review on the record of a final decision of the 1771 commissioner of Social Security that presents only an individual claim.” Supp. Rule 1(a).
1772 Supplemental Rule 1(b) then provides that the Civil Rules apply to proceedings under § 405(g)
1773 “except to the extent that they are inconsistent with these rules.”

1774 Subsequent rules prescribe the contents of the complaint (Rule 2), service in a simplified
1775 manner (Rule 3), the answer and any motions (Rule 4), the method of presenting the action for 1776 decision (Rule 5), the plaintiff’s brief (Rule 6), the Commissioner’s Brief (Rule 7), and a reply
1777 brief by the plaintiff (Rule 8). There is no mention of attorney fee awards.

1778 The Supplemental Rules went into effect on Dec. 1, 2022.

1779 One contrast between Judge Barksdale’s submission and the SSA submission is that the 1780 SSA focused only on § 406(b), while the judge’s proposal applies to any application for an award
1781 of attorney fees in § 504(g) proceedings. Either way, it might be odd to add a provision to Rule 1782 54(d)(2) if it is only about § 405(g) proceedings, or perhaps only some of them. There may well 1783 be other situations in which the same sort of timing disjunctions could be urged as a basis for an 1784 exception to the timing requirements of Rule 54(d)(2)(B). If we are to proceed down this line, it 1785 might be better to consider an amendment to the Supplemental Rules, perhaps a new rule solely 1786 about attorney fee awards under section 406(b). But given that the new Supplemental Rules went 1787 into effect less than a year ago, it might seem premature to change them now.

1788 It also seems worth noting that there are somewhat complex statutory provisions about 1789 attorney fees in § 405(g) proceedings. This seems to be a specialized practice with a specialized 1790 bar, and less familiar to others. And as one might imagine, the stakes can be considerable for the 1791 cognoscenti. But some introductory points can be made.

1792 Representation before SSA: 42 U.S.C. § 406(a) contains extensive provisions about fees 1793 for representation before the SSA. It permits non-attorneys to provide such representation, but the 1794 Commissioner may refuse to recognize a proposed representative or disqualify the representative.

1795 § 406(a)(1). In general, the Commissioner can by rule or regulation prescribe the maximum fees 1796 for such services.

1797 Section 406(a)(2) further limits such fees to 25% of the total payment of past-due benefits,
1798 and limits that to $4,000 total, though the Commissioner may increase that dollar amount if that 1799 increase is keyed to “the rate of increase in primary insurance amounts under section 415(i) of this 1800 title.” “[T]he term ‘past-due benefits’ excludes any benefits with respect to which payment has 1801 been continued pursuant to [provisions of another section] of the title.” See § 406(a)(2)(B).

1802 There are also fairly elaborate provisions in § 406(a)(3) - (5) regarding the SSA
1803 determination whether a fee claimed under this provision exceeds the maximum amount allowed 1804 under the statute.

1805 But it appears that § 406(a) is entirely or mainly about fees claimed without regard to an 1806 action in court governed by the new Supplemental Rules. If that is correct, there seems no need to 1807 address such determinations in the Civil Rules.

1808 Section 406(b) addresses attorney fee awards for proceedings in court. But it is not the only 1809 statute that addresses that. The Equal Access to Justice Act (EAJA), 28 U.S.C. § 2412, also can 1810 apply to a proceeding in court. Indeed, a 1985 amendment to the EAJA provided that “where the 1811 claimant’s attorney receives fees for the same work under both [§ 406(b) and the EAJA] the 1812 attorney [must] refun[d] to the claimant the amount of the smaller fee.” Astrue v. Ratliff, 130 S.
1813 Ct. 2521 (2010) (holding that the EAJA award belongs to the client, not the lawyer). In that case,
1814 the Court pointed out that the award to the attorney under § 406(b) went directly to the attorney,
1815 but the EAJA award went to the claimant, so the Government could offset the Claimant’s other 1816 obligations to the Government against the amount of the fee award.

1817 Though the SSA reported that the Civil Rules work well for EAJA applications in § 405(g)
1818 actions, EAJA decisions in such cases provide reasons for caution. This topic almost certainly is 1819 of great importance to both sides, and questions of timing (central to the current submission) have 1820 proved very challenging under the EAJA. It is likely that substantial education will be needed to 1821 gain a full grasp of these issues.

1822 Perhaps a good illustration is provided by Shalala v. Schaefer, 113 S. Ct. 2625 (1993), 1823 which Justice Scalia, speaking for the Court, introduced as presenting the question of “the proper 1824 timing of an application for attorney’s fees under the [EAJA] in a Social Security case.”

1825 Plaintiff Schaefer was denied disability benefits and sought judicial review under § 405(g).
1826 The district court found that the SSA had committed three errors and remanded to the SSA. As we 1827 shall see, the Court regarded it as important that the original court decision was under sentence
1828 four of § 405(g): “The court shall have the power to enter, upon the pleadings and transcript of the 1829 record, a judgment affirming, modifying, or reversing the decision of the Commissioner of Social 1830 Security, with or without remanding the case for a rehearing.”

1831 After remand, Schaefer’s application was granted. He then applied for an attorneys fee 1832 award under the EAJA. Under the EAJA, such an application must be made “within thirty days of 1833 final judgment in the action.” 28 U.S.C. § 2412(d)(1)(B). The SSA argued that the trigger for 1834 applying the 30-day requirement would be the end of the 60-day period from the entry of the

1835 court’s remand order. The district court, however, found that the remand order was not a final 1836 judgment if “the district court retain[s] jurisdiction . . . and plan[s] to enter dispositive sentence 1837 four judgmen[t]” after the administrative proceedings were complete, and made a fee award. The 1838 court of appeals affirmed.

1839 The Supreme Court emphasized that the EAJA requires the application for attorneys fees
1840 to be made within 30 days of “final judgment.” Schaefer argued, however, that in a sentence four 1841 ruling the court need not enter judgment at the time of remand, but could postpone entry and 1842 judgment and retain jurisdiction pending completion of the administrative proceedings on remand.
1843 Justice Scalia rejected this argument as “inconsistent with the plain language of sentence four,
1844 which authorizes a district court to enter a judgment ‘with or without’ a remand order, not a remand 1845 order ‘with or without’ a judgment.” Id. at 297.

1846 Indeed: “Immediate entry of judgment (as opposed to entry of judgment after post-remand 1847 agency proceedings have been completed and their results filed with the court) is in fact the 1848 principal feature that distinguishes a sentence-four remand from a sentence-six remand.” Id. At the 1849 time, Sentence six provided as follows:

1850 The court may, on motion of the Secretary made for good cause shown before he 1851 files his answer, remand the case to the Secretary for further action by the Secretary, 1852 and it may at any time order additional evidence to be taken before the Secretary,
1853 but only upon a showing that there is new evidence which is material and that there 1854 is good cause for the failure to incorporate such evidence into the record in a prior 1855 proceeding; and the Secretary shall, after the case is remanded, and after hearing 1856 such additional evidence if so ordered, modify or affirm his findings of fact or his 1857 decision, or both, and shall file with the court any such additional and modified 1858 findings of fact and decision, and a transcript of the additional record and testimony 1859 upon which his action in modifying or affirming was based.

1860 Id. at 297, n.2.

1861 Schaefer relied on Sullivan v. Hudson, 490 U.S. 877 (1989), holding that under the EAJA
1862 the fee award may include fees in connection with further proceedings before SSA. In that case, 1863 the district court said it was retaining jurisdiction for such a potential award. But in Sullivan v.
1864 Finkelstein, 496 U.S. 617 (1990), the Court “made clear . . . that th[e] retention of jurisdiction . . .
1865 was error . . . and a sentence-four remand order ‘terminate[s] the civil action’ seeking judicial 1866 review of the Secretary’s final decision.” 509 U.S. at 299. “We therefore do not consider the 1867 holding of Hudson binding as to sentence-four remands that are ordered (as they should be) without 1868 retention of jurisdiction.” Id. It added in a footnote that “Hudson remains good law as applied to 1869 remands ordered pursuant to sentence six.” Id. n.4.

1870 Nonetheless, the Court also held that the appeal in Schaeffer’s case was timely because the 1871 district court had not entered a judgment as a separate document as required by Rule 58, meaning
1872 that the remand judgment remained appealable at the time Schaefer applied for an EAJA fee award, 1873 making the application timely under the EAJA. So the award of fees was upheld.

1874 Justice Stevens (joined by Justice Blackmun) concurred in the judgment upholding the 1875 award of fees, but rejected the majority’s reasoning because the EAJA permits an award only to a
1876 “prevailing party,” so “it makes little sense to start the 30-day EAJA clock running before a 1877 claimant even knows whether he or she will be a ‘prevailing party’ under EAJA by securing 1878 benefits on remand.” Id. at 304. He also rejected the “major premise” underlying the Court’s 1879 decision “that there is a sharp distinction, for purposes of the EAJA, between remands ordered 1880 pursuant to sentence four and sentence six of 42 U.S.C. §405(g).” Id. at 305.

1881 Though Schaefer has been cited in more than 7,000 decisions since it was decided, it does 1882 not appear that the Supreme Court has addressed these issues again. Under the circumstances, 1883 caution is indicated before adopting a timing rule applicable to fee awards under § 406(b)(1)(A), 1884 which provides:

1885 Whenever a court renders a judgment favorable to a claimant under this subchapter 1886 who was represented before the court by an attorney, the court may determine and 1887 allow as part of its judgment a reasonable fee for such representation a reasonable 1888 fee for such representation, not in excess of 25 percent of the total past due benefits 1889 to which the claimant is entitled by reason of such judgment . . . .

1890 As with the EAJA, it would seem difficult for the court to determine the “past due benefits 1891 to which the claimant is entitled by reason of such judgment” until the further proceedings before
1892 the SSA are completed. But under Schaeffer, it appears that (at least for EAJA purposes) a 1893 sentence-four remand order is a judgment. And Finkelstein seemingly means that the court cannot 1894 retain jurisdiction to address fees after remanding under sentence four.

1895 Nevertheless, if it seems worthwhile, it may be possible to obviate the timing impact of 1896 Rule 54(d)(2)(B) as an additional Supplemental Rule 9:

1897 Rule 9. Attorney fee award under § 406(b).

1898 In its judgment remanding to the Commissioner, the court may[, without regard to Rule
1899 62(d)(2)(B),] {notwithstanding Rule 62(d)(2)(B),} retain jurisdiction to permit plaintiff to 1900 [move] {apply} for an attorney fee award under 42 U.S.C. § 406(b) within __ days of the 1901 [final decision of the Commissioner] {final notice of the award sent to plaintiffs’ counsel} 1902 after the remand.

1903 The foregoing is a very tentative draft. Whether retention of jurisdiction is really valid with 1904 regard to a sentence-four remand remains uncertain. Recommending that district courts disregard 1905 Rule 58 when they want to do so seems to invite a violation of the Civil Rules. The draft is focused 1906 only on changing the time limits for a motion for an attorney fee award. Rule 54(d)(2)(B) refers to 1907 a motion, not an application. Rule 7(b)(1) says requests to the court for an order must be made by 1908 motion.

1909 The draft speaks of the “final decision” of the Commissioner because that is the term used
1910 in the Supplemental Rules. See Supplemental Rule 2(b)(1)(B), requiring that the complaint 1911 “identify the final decision to be reviewed, including any identifying designation provided by the 1912 Commissioner with the final decision.” As noted in braces, the original proposal by SSA used 1913 “final notice of the award sent to plaintiff’s counsel.”

1914           The SSA proposal and Judge Barksdale’s M.D. Fla. local rule both contain specifics about 1915 that the moving party ought to provide in support of the motion. It is not clear why the procedures
1916 of Rule 54(d)(2) need elaboration, and Rule 54(d)(2)(D) authorizes local rules for resolving 1917 fee-related issues. It is not clear why more is needed in a national rule, and could be that some 1918 parties might regard some features to afford them an advantage. The problem to be solved is a 1919 timing problem, not a content problem.

1920           If this task is undertaken, it will probably be important for the Advisory Committee to 1921 become better educated about the details of § 406(b) fee awards.

---

Hello, Ms. Wilson.

I hope this email finds you well.

I present for consideration an addition to the new social security supplemental rules on the timing of a motion for attorney’s fees under 42 U.S.C. § 406(b).

As background, for representation during court proceedings, 42 U.S.C. § 406(b) (disability insurance benefits) and 42 U.S.C. § 1383(d)(2) (supplemental security income) provide that an attorney who obtains remand may petition for attorney’s fees incurred during the court proceeding, and the court, as part of its judgment under 42 U.S.C. § 405(g) or 42 U.S.C. § 1383(c)(3), may allow reasonable fees not exceeding 25 percent of past-due benefits. Bergen v. Comm’r of Soc. Sec., 454 F.3d 1273, 1275–77 (11th Cir. 2006). The fee statutes do not displace contingency-fee agreements within the statutory ceiling. Gisbrecht v. Barnhart, 535 U.S. 789, 793 (2002).

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54(d)(2)(B) requires a party to move for attorney’s fees no later than 14 days after the entry of judgment.

In Bergen, the Eleventh Circuit held the 14-day deadline in Rule 54(d)(2)(B) applies to motions for attorney’s fees under § 406(b) and § 1383(d)(2). But recognizing that the amount of fees under a contingency arrangement is not established until long after remand (once the amount of past-due benefits is determined), the Eleventh Circuit suggested a “best practice”; specifically, for a plaintiff to request, and a district court to include in the remand judgment, a statement that attorney’s fees may be applied for within a specified time after the Commissioner’s determination of past-due benefits. Bergen, 454 F.3d at 1278 n.2.

The Eleventh Circuit later acknowledged that “best practice” was not a “universally workable solution” and suggested another solution:

Perhaps another vehicle for creating some much needed certainty in this area of the law is for the district courts to fashion a general order or a local rule permitting district-wide application of a universal process for seeking fees under these unique circumstance. It is our hope the district courts, in doing so, will keep in mind Congress’s intent behind § 406(b), to encourage attorneys to represent Social Security claimants.

Blich v. Astrue, 261 F. App’x 241, 242 n.1 (11th Cir. 2008). From there, disparate local rules or administrative orders attempted to create a best practice. Other circuits have similarly struggled with the issue.

Now that supplemental rules for social security cases are in place, a universal rule regarding the timing of a § 406(b) fee motion appears warranted. Making the timing universal would accord with the reasoning behind the new supplemental rules for social security cases. No reason for local variations is apparent.

The Middle District of Florida is working on revisions to its local rules, and in the absence of a rule in the supplemental rules, is considering the following local rule to address the issue.

(e) ATTORNEY’S FEE IN A SOCIAL SECURITY CASE AFTER REMAND. No later than fourteen days after receipt of a “close-out” letter, a lawyer requesting an attorney’s fee, payable from withheld benefits, must move for the fee and include in the motion:

- (1) the agency letter specifying the withheld benefits,
- (2) any contingency fee agreement, and
- (3) proof that the proposed fee is reasonable.

Thank you for considering this issue.

1922 18. Rule 30(b)(6) – 23-CV-I

1923 Submission 23-CV-I, from William D. Sanders, proposes an amendment to Rule 30(b)(6):

1924 (6) *Notice or Subpoena Directed to an Organization. In its notice or subpoena, a party
1925 may name as the deponent a public or private corporation, an association, a
1926 governmental agency, or other entity and must describe with reasonable
1927 particularity the matter for examination. The named organization must designate 1928 one or more officers, directors, or managing agents, or designate other persons who 1929 consent to testify on its behalf; and it may set out the matters on which each person
1930 designated will testify. Before or promptly after the notice or subpoena is served, 1931 the serving party and the organization must confer in good faith about the matters
1932 for examination. A subpoena must advise a nonparty organization of its duty to 1933 confer with the serving party and to designate each person who will testify. The 1934 persons designated must testify about information known or reasonably available 1935 to the organization. As part of deponent’s duty to confer in “good faith,” it shall 1936 identify the witness or witnesses who will testify as to each of the matters for which 1937 testimony is sought in the Notice of Deposition at least seven days prior to the 1938 deposition. Such identification shall include the name and business address of the 1939 witness, and position held within the deponent organization. This paragraph (6)
1940 does not preclude a deposition by any other procedure allowed by these rules.

1941 In the same vein, Mr. Sanders also proposes adding a new sub-paragraph to Rule 33(a):

1942 (3) An interrogatory may inquire as the identification of any witness for whom a 1943 deponent is required to make a designation for testimony pursuant to a Notice of 1944 Deposition issued pursuant to Rule 30(b)(6) and the time for response to such 1945 interrogatory shall be governed by the time for such identification pursuant to Rule
1946 30(b)(6).

1947 As Mr. Sanders recognizes, this set of issues were addressed in detail during the 1948 consideration of the Rule 30(b)(6) amendments that went into effect in 2020. He regards his 1949 proposal as plugging “a gap in the rule.” Suitable treatment of that concern requires considerable 1950 attention to the evolution and careful consideration of the 2020 amendment. In fact, the published 1951 amendment proposal had something Mr. Sanders would likely have approved. But after very 1952 extensive public comment that was withdrawn by the Rule 30(b)(6) Subcommittee. Then the issues 1953 were discussed at great length during the Advisory Committee’s April 2019 meeting, extending 1954 over two days. The minutes of that extensive discussion are reproduced below. It may well be that 1955 the current Committee would come out differently, but it is difficult to regard the actual 2019
1956 outcome as resulting from inattention.

1957 The Advisory Committee still includes members who were involved in the consideration
1958 of Rule 30(b)(6) leading up to the Spring 2019 meeting – Judge Rosenberg, Judge Jordan, Joseph
1959 Sellers, Ariana Tadler, Helen Witt, and Dean Spencer. At least for them, this discussion revisits
1960 recent business. The point of this presentation, however, is to show that the Advisory Committee 1961 (and its Rule 30(b)(6) Subcommittee chaired by Judge Joan Ericksen and including Judge Jordan 1962 and Mr. Sellers) spent a lot of effort considering kindred issues and eventually hit on the 1963 compromise amendment that went into effect in 2020.

1964 Perhaps it is time to revisit these issues, but doing so should occur with eyes open about 1965 the efforts of the recent past. Perhaps experience in the two plus years since the 2020 amendments
1966 went into effect warrants taking up this rule again. But it may better to recognize that Mr. Sanders
1967 raises important issues, but also that the Advisory Committee has recently spent a very large 1968 amount of time and energy on very similar ideas.

1969 A further note is that the Rule 33(a)(3) suggestion seems to present serious timing issues,
1970 to the extent it seems to be triggered by the service of a Rule 30(b)(6) notice, and that rule does 1971 not impose a 30-day limit on response, as does Rule 33. Rule 30(b)(1) requires only “reasonable 1972 notice” without specifying a number of days.

1973 As a summary, one could begin with cartoonish versions of what might be called the 1974 contending objections to existing 30(b)(6) practice when the Rule 30(b)(6) Subcommittee set to 1975 work: For simplicity’s sake, we can consider them “plaintiff” and “defendant” views. Either side
1976 can use the rule, but it seems that the plaintiff side does so more frequently and the defense side
1977 most frequently is on the receiving end. Here are the cartoons:

1978 Plaintiff view: Routinely corporate defendants send people to the deposition who do not 1979 know what they are supposed to testify about and have no knowledge about any or most of 1980 the matters on which testimony is sought. The practice of “bandying” – hiding behind the 1981 ignorance of corporate employee A, B, and C while the plaintiff tries to find the “right”
1982 person has continued despite the goal the rulemakers had of ending it in adopting 30(b)(6)
1983 – continued despite the adopting of 30(b)(6).

1984 Defense view: Plaintiffs routinely abuse the rule by submitting long lists of broadly-worded
1985 categories having only minimal relevance to the case (if that) and then surprise well-1986 prepared witnesses with tangential inquiries, later contending that the corporation is 1987 “bound” by the witness’s testimony that she has no knowledge on the subject and forbidden
1988 to offer evidence on the topic. Any effort to limit our choice whom to designate to testify 1989 on the organization’s behalf undermines the rights of the organization; if plaintiffs want to 1990 take depositions of specific people they can do so, but those people do not “bind” the 1991 organization.

1992 After a considerable amount of discussion and meeting with bar groups, the Advisory 1993 Committee ultimately proposed a preliminary draft that was published for public comment in 1994 August 2018:

1995 (6) Notice or Subpoena Directed to an Organization. In its notice or subpoena, a party
1996 may name as the deponent a public or private corporation, an association, a
1997 governmental agency, or other entity and must describe with reasonable
1998 particularity the matters for examination. The named organization must ~~then~~ 1999 designate one or more officers, directors, or managing agents, or designate other 2000 persons who consent to testify on its behalf; and it may set out the matters on which 2001 each person designated will testify. Before or promptly after the notice or subpoena

2002 is served, and continuing as necessary, the serving party and the organization must 2003 confer in good faith about the number and description of the matters for 2004 examination and the identity of each person the organization will designate to 2005 testify. A subpoena must advise a nonparty organization of its duty to confer with 2006 the serving party and to designate each person who will testify. The persons 2007 designated must testify about information known or reasonably available to the 2008 organization. This paragraph (6) does not preclude a deposition by any other 2009 procedure allowed by these rules.

2010 The public comment period brought much commentary. 25 witnesses testified at a hearing
2011 in Phoenix, and 55 at a hearing in Washington, D.C. More than 1780 written comments were 2012 received. It is difficult to summarize all those submissions briefly, but one major debate was about 2013 the proposed requirement that the organization confer about which person it would designate.
2014 “Defense” side witnesses repeatedly stressed that the organization has an unfettered choice whom 2015 to designate, and that this designation sometimes must be changed at the last moment, either due 2016 to illness or some unforeseen development affecting the witness’s ability to testify at the appointed 2017 time and place. “Plaintiff” side witnesses stressed that they too often found that the designated 2018 witnesses lacked familiarity with critical matters, sometimes only after traveling along distance to 2019 attend the deposition.

2020 After the public comment ended, the 30(b)(6) Subcommittee met again and carefully
2021 reviewed the input it has received. Notes of that meeting are at pp. 115-23 of the agenda book for 2022 the April 2019 meeting. That discussion led to a consensus to revise the published proposal in 2023 three respects:

2024 (1) The requirement that the organization confer about the identity of its representative was 2025 deleted. The Subcommittee was persuaded that a mandatory requirement that the 2026 organization confer “in good faith” about the identity of the representative could encroach 2027 on the organization’s recognized right to pick its witness.

2028 (2) The phrase “continue as necessary” was also deleted as representing an intrusive
2029 overlay suggesting unduly extended conversations.

2030 (3) The requirement that the conference address “the number and description of” the 2031 matters for examination was removed. Much debate had occurred about imposing a 2032 numerical limit on matters for examination, and during the public comment period there
2033 was strong objection to an abstract number of matters. To the extent including this factor 2034 would matter, it might result in broader description of matters for examination, which was 2035 contrary to the thrust of the overall amendment.

2036 But because requiring advance notice of the identity of the organization’s representative
2037 received much support during the public comment period, the Subcommittee also presented an 2038 alternative approach to the full Committee at the April 2019 meeting. Alternative 2 was as follows:

2039 (6) Notice or Subpoena Directed to an Organization. In its notice or subpoena, a party 2040 may name as the deponent a public or private corporation, a partnership, an 2041 association, a governmental agency, or other entity, ~~and~~ must describe with

2042 reasonable particularity the matters for examination, and must give at least 30 days
2043 notice of the deposition. The named organization must ~~then~~ designate one or more 2044 officers, directors, or managing agents, or designate other persons who consent to 2045 testify on its behalf; ~~and it may set out the matters on which each person designated~~ 2046 ~~will testify.~~ Before or promptly after the notice or subpoena is served, the serving 2047 party and the organization must confer in good faith about the matters for 2048 examination. No fewer than [7] {5} [3] days before the deposition, the organization
2049 must identify the person or persons It has designated by name and, if it has 2050 designated more than one person, set out the matters on which each person will 2051 testify. A subpoena must advise a nonparty organization of its duty to make this 2052 designation and to confer with the serving party. The persons designated must 2053 testify about information known or reasonably available to the organization. This 2054 paragraph (6) does not preclude a deposition by any other procedure allowed by 2055 these rules.

2056 Alternative 2 is not exactly the same as what Mr. Sanders proposes, but it addresses the 2057 same basic concerns. During the April 2019 two-day meeting of the Advisory Committee, there
2058 was very extensive discussion of these issues, and the eventual decision was not to pursue 2059 Alternative 2. The discussion is reflected in the minutes of that meeting:

2060 Minutes of Advisory Committee meeting
2061 April 2-3, 2019, San Antonio, TX
2062 Rule 30(b)(6)

2063 Judge Bates introduced the Rule 30(b)(6) Subcommittee Report by suggesting that it
2064 probably will prove to be the major item for discussion at this meeting. The proposal to require a 2065 conference of the noticing party and the deponent about a Rule 30(b)(6) deposition of an 2066 organization was published last August. Hearings were held this January and February, drawing 2067 some 80 witnesses. Reporter Marcus records a count of 1,780 written comments; many of the 2068 comments were repetitive — they did not reflect 1,780 different viewpoints.

2069 The Subcommittee has recommended revisions of the published proposal in response to 2070 the testimony and comments. They recommend that the amended rule continue to require a 2071 conference about the matters for examination. But they also recommend deleting the proposed 2072 requirement to confer about the identity of the witnesses to appear for the organization, and to 2073 delete the requirement to confer about the number of matters for examination. Related changes 2074 also are recommended.

2075 The Subcommittee also advances, without a recommendation either way, an alternative
2076 that would add a requirement that 30-days notice be given of a Rule 30(b)(6) deposition, and that 2077 some number of days before the deposition the organization name the witnesses who will appear.

2078 Judge Ericksen delivered the Rule 30(b)(6) Subcommittee Report. She began by noting 2079 that “the hearings were very helpful.” They, and the written comments, led the Subcommittee to 2080 recommend revisions of the published draft. The Subcommittee is unanimously behind the 2081 recommended revisions. They are solid. With these revisions, the Subcommittee recommends that 2082 the Committee recommend adoption of the proposal. It also presents two possible alternative

2083 additions for consideration, without recommendation. The most “vociferous” comments addressed 2084 the published proposal’s requirement that the conference include discussion of the identity of the 2085 persons who would appear as witnesses for the organization. Everyone agrees that the organization 2086 retains sole discretion to designate who its witnesses will be. What, then, is the point of conferring?
2087 There also was some concern that knowing the identity of the witnesses would lead to the misuse
2088 of social media research to turn the deposition into a personal deposition, not an organization
2089 deposition.

2090 The testimony and comments also expressed concern about requiring discussion of the 2091 number of matters for examination. Many suggested that if the number of matters described for 2092 examination is reduced, the matters will be described with greater breadth. Broad descriptions, 2093 even if not vague, make it difficult to focus witness preparation and to conduct the deposition
2094 without disagreements. The Subcommittee long since abandoned any idea of prescribing a 2095 numerical limit on the number of matters for examination. Requiring discussion of the number 2096 could lead some lawyers to assert an implied right to limit the number.

2097 Withdrawal of the requirement to confer about the identity of the witnesses led to a 2098 recommendation to withdraw the words that the parties confer, “continuing as necessary.” Those 2099 words were inserted because it was recognized that an organization cannot determine who its 2100 witnesses will be until it knows what the matters for examination will be. They are no longer 2101 needed for this purpose, and could become an occasion for mischief. To be sure, conferring still 2102 may need to be continued in stages to satisfy the good-faith requirement, but a careful balance is 2103 needed when adding possible points for strategic posturing. The constant precept to do no harm
2104 supports deletion of “continuing as necessary.”

2105 Judge Ericksen went on to describe the two alternatives presented by the Subcommittee
2106 without recommendation. They grow out of deliberations about the withdrawn recommendation 2107 to require discussion of the identity of the witnesses to be designated by the organization. Rather 2108 than discuss identity, the organization could be required to name them at some interval before the 2109 time designated for the deposition. To make this work, it seems necessary to set a minimum notice
2110 period. The alternative draft therefore would add a requirement that the notice of a Rule 30(b)(6)
2111 deposition be given at least 30 days before the designated time. The time for the organization to 2112 name the designated witnesses could be 7, or 5, or 3 days before the deposition — those 2113 alternatives are offered as illustrations without suggesting a choice among them. One important 2114 reason for identifying the designated witnesses is that the organization may designate more than 2115 one, assigning them to different matters for examination. The party taking the deposition should 2116 know what matters will be addressed by each witness as it prepares to depose them.

2117 Alternative 2A reacts to the fears that advance notice of witness names will foster misuse 2118 by requiring that the organization specify, without naming them, which witness will address which 2119 matters for examination. The Subcommittee believes that if either version of Alternative 2 comes 2120 to be recommended, it should be published for comment. Much testimony and many comments 2121 addressed the advantages and disadvantages of requiring that the organization’s witnesses be 2122 named in advance, perhaps in such detail that the Committee would not likely learn anything more 2123 by republication. But there has been no opportunity to address the advance notice requirements.

2124 Professor Marcus added the suggestion that it might be better to defer discussing the 2125 number of days set for the notice provisions until there is at least a tentative Committee position
2126 on Alternatives 2 and 2A. Judge Bates expressed the Committee’s thanks to Judge Ericksen, 2127 Professor Marcus, and the Subcommittee. He noted that some comments have been addressed to 2128 the Subcommittee Report as it appears in the agenda book for this meeting. Lawyers for Civil 2129 Justice supports adoption of the revised proposal, adding a 30-day notice requirement but not 2130 adding a requirement that witnesses be named before the deposition. They urge that republication
2131 would not be required. Several groups support Alternative 2, requiring the organization to name 2132 its designated witnesses before the deposition, and supporting the 7-day period.

2133 Judge Bates also noted that the limited advance allocation of unnamed witnesses to 2134 different matters for examination set out in Alternative 2A might, by example, discourage 2135 organizations that now name witnesses in advance from continuing to do so. Several comments 2136 have said that the best practice of the best lawyers now provides names in advance. It would be 2137 unwise to discourage it. Resistance to advance naming of witnesses arises from distrust of the not-2138 so-good lawyers who may misuse the names for social media research that supports efforts to 2139 convert the occasion from an organization deposition into a personal deposition of the witness.
2140 Judge Bates also suggested that the prospect of republication should not deter consideration of the 2141 advance-naming proposal. The Committee should generate the best rule possible. The notice 2142 provisions might well require republication. If so, so be it. The fear of bad practices that seek to 2143 convert the deposition to a personal deposition are offset by the advantages of advance
2144 identification. Among the advantages are those that arise when the same witness has previously 2145 testified for the organization on the same matters — the transcript may be available to support 2146 better focus in taking the deposition, and it may be possible to select documents shown to be 2147 familiar to the witness.

2148 Members of the Subcommittee then provided further views. One Subcommittee member 2149 was “not a proponent of Alternative 2.” Naming the witness might lead to gamesmanship.
2150 Questions may be prepared that seek the witness’s personal information, not information the 2151 organization has had an opportunity to prepare the witness to understand and relate accurately. The 2152 questions may elicit “I don’t know” responses, creating a false appearance of inadequate 2153 preparation.

2154 Another Subcommittee member offered some support for requiring advance notice of 2155 witness names. Without this requirement, the direction to confer about the matters for examination
2156 “is pretty weak sauce.” The fear that requiring advance notice will deter lawyers from continuing 2157 their present best practices — for example by shortening the period of advance notice down to the 2158 required minimum — seems overdrawn. The less we require, the more room there will remain for 2159 controversy about the desirable more.

2160 Still another Subcommittee member said that Subcommittee discussions had been robust.
2161 “Concerns were expressed on both sides of the ‘v.’” about requiring advance notice of witness
2162 names. The purpose of discovery is to provide information for the efficient and just resolution of 2163 litigation. Advance disclosure of witness identities can advance that goal. Yes, there is an 2164 opportunity to abuse social media information and bleeding over into making it an individual 2165 deposition. But good lawyers can handle these extreme situations when they occur. The alternative 2166 that would simply allocate unidentified witnesses to different subsets of the matters for

2167 examination is interesting, but it does not add enough — it does not advance preparation for 2168 inquiring into each matter.

2169 A Committee member began the all-Committee discussion by suggesting that the rule
2170 should be guided by, and should reinforce, best practices. Testimony at the February hearing
2171 revealed that some lawyers are reluctant to reveal witness identity in advance. “That gave me 2172 pause.” But identification — not conferring about it — is a good thing. “Social media are part of 2173 how we live today.” Abusive questioning can be managed. And advance identification can be 2174 useful if the witness has testified for the organization on other occasions. “I support Alternative 2175 2.”

2176 Another Committee member “inclined” toward the revised version of the published
2177 proposal. “Rule 30(b)(6) is a unique tool to get information from an organization.” It is not 2178 designed to get individual knowledge. “The overlap between corporate and personal is a problem 2179 now,” creating problems in sorting out what is “binding” on the organization. And forgoing a 2180 requirement of advance naming can lead to desirable trading — for example, an agreement to 2181 provide names in advance in return for identification of the documents that will be used in 2182 examining the witness. We should be careful to not get in the way of current best practices.

2183 This initial discussion was punctuated by a reminder that if Alternative 2 is approved, it
2184 will be for republication. If views continue to be divided, republication will provide an opportunity 2185 to gather more information. The 30-day notice provision won support as something that could be 2186 added to the original proposal. “You need it to prepare the witness.” Judge Ericksen responded
2187 that this view had been expressed by many organizations. But the Subcommittee is not 2188 recommending it. The 30-day notice provision was inserted in Alternatives 2 and 2A — remember
2189 that the Subcommittee advanced them for discussion without making any recommendation — 2190 because it seemed a necessary support for a provision requiring disclosure of witness names at any 2191 interval before the time for the deposition.

2192 Another Committee member offered support for Alternative 2. The downside that advance
2193 identification of the organization’s witness will lead to social media searches for personal 2194 information does not seem much entrenched by advance notice. Millennial lawyers can undertake 2195 a comprehensive search even if the witness is identified only at the moment the deposition begins.
2196 Even for the Subcommittee’s recommended revision of the published rule, the draft Committee
2197 Note, p. 105, lines 193-194 of the agenda materials, suggests that it may be productive to discuss 2198 at the conference the numbers of witnesses and the matters on which they will testify. Is this a 2199 tentative backdoor approach to embracing Alternative 2?

2200 Judge Ericksen responded that “the mandated conference could include lots of things. We 2201 hear of many things that are discussed now.” Professor Marcus added that there is a legitimate 2202 concern about “legislating by Committee Note,” but this is a pretty soft sentence. It says only that 2203 “it may be productive” to discuss a few suggested topics. It does not support any argument that 2204 there is a right to confer about them. These responses were accepted as fair.

2205 The Department of Justice does not favor identification of witnesses before the deposition.
2206 The organization is the deponent, not the individual. The deposition is not about the individual
2207 witness. Better practice is to have the parties frame the matters for examination, but not to name

2208 the witnesses. A Committee member went to the Notes on the February 22 Subcommittee
2209 conference call, pointing to lines 692-694 at page 120 of the agenda materials. That sentence
2210 observed that it might be useful to add to the Committee Note for the recommended amendment a 2211 statement about the value of specifying which topics the various witnesses would address as part
2212 of the conference about the matters for examination. There are concerns about the need to change
2213 witnesses at the last minute before the deposition, and about misuse of the fruits of social media
2214 research, but why not at least suggest in the Committee Note that it may be helpful to discuss 2215 which matters which witness will address? The response was that this suggestion in fact appears 2216 in the draft note, p. 105 at line 194. But the rejoinder was that at this point the Note might refer to 2217 discussing the identity of the witnesses. Another Committee member agreed — if it is best practice
2218 to discuss the identity of witnesses, why not refer to it in the Note?

2219 The characterization of best practice was questioned. The hearings and comments
2220 repeatedly emphasized that the best lawyers regard discussion of witness identity as the best 2221 practice “when they choose to do it.” It is the best practice in the right circumstances. “We should 2222 not strip professional judgment out of what is best practice.” It would not be the end of the world
2223 to adopt Alternative 2 and require advance notification of witness identity, but that is not the same 2224 as hinting that best practice, even if not rule text, requires discussion of witness identity. We should 2225 remember that the possibility of requiring advance naming of witnesses arose during the January
2226 hearing as Committee members raised it as one possible response to the difficulties of requiring 2227 that the conference include discussion of identity. Another Committee member noted that advance
2228 identification of witnesses was not included among the many proposed Rule 30(b)(6) amendments
2229 that the Subcommittee considered and rejected, as described beginning at line 738 of page 121 of 2230 the agenda materials. It is a new-found issue. Yet another Committee member agreed. Advance
2231 identification of witnesses arose as an alternative to the many protests about requiring discussion
2232 of witness identity.

2233 Broader doubts were raised about recommending any Rule 30(b)(6) amendments at all.
2234 There is a good bit of anecdotal information about problems in some cases, but it is not clear that 2235 this is enough to support any amendments. The revised proposal recommended by the 2236 Subcommittee could lead to gamesmanship. The proposed rule text direction to confer about the 2237 matters for examination does not embrace all of the six things the Committee Note recommends
2238 for discussion. The rule does not require discussion of those things. They should be put into rule 2239 text, or removed from the Note.

2240 These doubts expanded to consider the discussion of “good faith” in the draft Note. Even 2241 after deleting “continuing as necessary” from the proposed rule text, the Note says that a single 2242 conference may not suffice. It also says that agreement is not required. So what does good faith
2243 require — when can it be established without reaching agreement? The Note seems to suggest

2244 that if the parties fail to agree, they should ask the court for guidance. Why not rely on Rule 26I
2245 without revising Rule 30(b)(6)? A motion for a protective order must be preceded by conferring 2246 or attempting to confer in good faith, accomplishing the same purpose — a conference among 2247 those affected.

2248 Judge Ericksen agreed that the Note does speak to matters not included in the rule text. But 2249 the Note provides insight into what can be accomplished in conferring about the matters for

2250 examination, and to encourage it. “It’s hard to convey the breadth of what can be ironed out” by 2251 conferring. And requiring a conference is useful — witnesses have told us that they attempt to 2252 initiate discussion of the matters for examination and are rebuffed. Professor Marcus noted that 2253 generalized discussions of what constitutes “good faith” are always possible. But good-faith
2254 conferring is already required in other discovery rules, see Rule 26I and 37(a)(1), and has worked.
2255 We can give examples of good practices in the Committee Note, even if some of them extend 2256 beyond the obligation to discuss in good faith the matters for examination. This is not legislating
2257 by Committee Note, but simply offering observations about what might happen during the 2258 conference. It is better to discuss things in advance than during a partially failed deposition.

2259 Professor Coquillette agreed that a Committee Note cannot add to, or withdraw from, the 2260 rule text. But this draft Note does not run afoul of that precept. This discussion led to the suggestion 2261 that perhaps the Committee Note should add to the second paragraph that appears on p. 105 the 2262 express statement that appears in the third paragraph, recognizing that the opportunity to discuss 2263 does not imply any obligation to agree. Moving back to the recommended rule text, it was noted
2264 that the Federal Magistrate Judges’ comment on the published proposal observed that Rule
2265 30(b)(6) raises issues that are often litigated. They think that a rule will help — indeed they support 2266 the published proposal that requires conferring about the choice of witnesses.

2267 A different perspective on the recommended rule text was offered. The MDL
2268 Subcommittee continually encounters the question whether any MDL-specific rules should be 2269 detailed or general. The need to preserve wide margins of discretion is often expressed. The 2270 recommended revision of the published proposal is more open-ended than the Alternative 2 2271 requirement to name witnesses in advance of the deposition, and to give at least 30 days notice of 2272 the deposition. These concerns suggest that it is safer to stick with the less aggressive changes in 2273 Alternative 1.

2274 More hesitating support was offered for Alternative 2. The argument that it will promote 2275 gamesmanship does not seem persuasive at first. But caution is warranted by the observation that 2276 naming the witnesses before the deposition date is the best practice only in the right circumstances.
2277 Still, there are obvious advantages in advance naming.

2278 A counter concern was offered. It often happens that just before the deposition “you realize 2279 the first chosen witness won’t work.” If you change to a different witness, the noticing party will 2280 take that as a signal to take a personal deposition of the first-named witness. That is not harmless 2281 — the withdrawn witness may have no personal knowledge, but have been instructed in 2282 organization knowledge to some uncertain extent and with uncertain results. When subjected to an 2283 individual deposition, the witness may get it garbled, confusing a distorted version of organization
2284 information with personal knowledge. Beyond that, Rule 26I already includes an obligation to 2285 confer, or to attempt to confer. And the recommended proposal does not state any consequences 2286 for failing to agree.

2287 The concern about the last-minute need to change witnesses was addressed by asking 2288 whether the risk would be reduced by adopting a brief period for providing the names. Perhaps the 2289 3-day alternative in the draft, or even less — 2 days, or even 1. The distinction between deposing 2290 the organization and a personal deposition of the same witness was noted again. The two should 2291 not be conflated, even when the witness is a fact witness as well as an organization’s designated

2292 witness. The confusion can be aggravated when the witness is named in advance. The confusion 2293 can be dispelled in part by scheduling back-to-back depositions, one confined to deposing the 2294 organization through the individual and the other to deposing the individual, but the lines are not 2295 always observed.

2296 A Committee member suggested that requiring that witnesses be named in advance would 2297 inevitably draw the parties into discussing who the witness should be. The noticing party will say 2298 that it is the wrong person, we need to discuss the choice. There is an argument that requiring 2299 advance naming is a step back toward requiring the parties to confer about the choice. Another
2300 member agreed that requiring names can lead to talking about the choice, but Alternative 2 does 2301 not require the organization to confer. The organization has the prerogative to refuse to discuss its 2302 choice. Professor Marcus observed that the sequence of steps appears clear enough, but something 2303 still more explicit could be added to the Note: First, there must be at least 30 days notice. Then, 2304 before or promptly after the notice, the parties must confer about the matters for examination.
2305 Then, having settled the matters for examination however well the conference permits, the 2306 organization chooses its witness or witnesses and names them at the required interval before the 2307 deposition.

2308 Discussion returned to the question whether Rule 30(b)(6) should be amended at all. A 2309 judge said that “this may be the most used, most valuable discovery tool. It is used in almost every 2310 case. We do not want to weaken it.” The Committee studied it intensely twelve years ago. The 2311 complaints, then as now, went to both sides. Organizations protested that there were too many 2312 possible matters for examination. Deposing parties complained that organization witnesses were 2313 not adequately prepared. The best lawyers confer before the deposition now, and the most we think 2314 we can do by amending the rule is to require them to confer. But requiring them to confer has a 2315 potential to solve a lot of the problems. “This will not cause the structure to fail.” Disputes happen 2316 at depositions now, and will continue to occur no matter what.

2317 The same judge added that experience with 30(b)(6) depositions, although some years ago,
2318 suggests that it is not necessary to know the name of the organization’s witness. The inquiring 2319 party has a lot of information from documents. The questions can be asked no matter who the 2320 witness is. And there are potential downsides in requiring advance notice of witness names. But if 2321 the Committee finds substantial reasons to inquire further, it may be wise to go ahead and republish
2322 for comments on witness naming. Another judge agreed with these thoughts. And yet another 2323 agreed. Advance naming may upset the balance of what good lawyers do now. Experience as a 2324 judge shows frequent encounters with disagreements about the number of matters for examination, 2325 but none about the identity of the organization’s witnesses.

2326 A different Committee member thought these observations by three judges make sense.
2327 But the problem remains with the draft Committee Note for the revised proposal. It seems to 2328 expand on what good faith means for discussing issues beyond defining the matters for 2329 examination, and to encourage parties to ask the court for guidance.

2330 Another Committee member suggested that a value of conferring about the matters for 2331 examination is often to reduce the number. A party can agree to provide the requested information
2332 in documents, suggesting that there will be no need for a witness if the inquiring party is satisfied 2333 by the documents. As to identifying the organization’s witnesses, there have been cases where my

2334 colleagues refuse to provide names as a bargaining tactic to seek tradeoffs. “Gamesmanship 2335 happens on both sides.” But we would like for more lawyers to follow best practices, and that can 2336 be encouraged by establishing them in rule text.

2337 A different judge said that the rule should retain the meet-and-confer requirement. And it
2338 is desirable to provide a Committee Note that, in the very beginning, suggests discussion of other 2339 topics. The draft Note discussion of good faith, appearing at p. 106 of the agenda materials, 2340 “accomplishes a lot.” But what about the sentence that suggests the parties seek guidance from the 2341 court if they reach an impasse?

2342 Professor Marcus responded that the suggestion about seeking guidance from the court is 2343 a suggestion, not a command. It responds to many comments that the rule does not provide any 2344 means to resolve disputes when the parties do not reach agreement. A related suggestion appears 2345 in the next-to-final paragraph of the draft note, noting that when the parties anticipate the need for 2346 Rule 30(b)(6) depositions they may be able to begin planning during the Rule 26(f) conference
2347 and in Rule 16 pretrial conferences. All of these suggestions are aimed at avoiding combative 2348 positions — “Give me what I want or I’ll make a motion.” The open-ended suggestion to seek 2349 guidance reflects the practice of many judges to entertain discovery disputes without requiring a 2350 formal motion.

2351 A judge noted that the note does not tell lawyers they have to go to the court, and, even 2352 without this sentence, they know they can seek the court’s help. The same observation was 2353 extended to the suggestions in the preceding Note paragraph about other matters the parties may 2354 find appropriate for discussion. Judge Ericksen added that many magistrate judges and district 2355 judges who do discovery disputes report that they like to be available by phone to facilitate 2356 discussions without the formality of a motion.

2357 William Hangley reminded the Committee that the letter from active members of the ABA
2358 Litigation Section that launched the current Rule 30(b)(6) project noted that the Civil Rules do not 2359 provide for anything short of motion practice to resolve disputes. They asked for language like the 2360 Note draft, suggesting that the parties “confer” with the court. He further noted that some courts
2361 will rule against objections by a party that has not sought a protective order. Counsel often suggest 2362 that moving for a protective order is the only way to resolve disputes. “That’s a wasteful way of 2363 doing it.” He added that it is a mistake to think that organizations want to provide a witness whose 2364 response is “I do not know.” That means another deposition. “We want to produce the most 2365 knowledgeable person.”

2366 An observer noted that the proposed rule applies to nonparty organizations as well as party
2367 organizations. It imposes obligations akin to Rule 45 obligations to produce documents, but it lacks
2368 the safety valve remedies in Rule 45(d)(1)(B). Protections are not provided even for nonparties 2369 that are not within the jurisdiction of the court where the action is pending. The misuse of social 2370 media research when a witness is named in advance is an issue, but so is the ability of the inquiring
2371 lawyer to go to the networks of lawyers to find out about the witness’s testimony in other cases 2372 and use it to shape the deposition.

2373 The drafting of this sentence in the proposed rule text was questioned: “A subpoena must 2374 advise a nonparty organization of its duty to make this designation and to confer with the serving

2375 party.” It might be better if the provisions were flipped: “its duty to confer with the serving party 2376 and to designate each person who will testify.” A different suggestion was to simplify it: “must 2377 advise a nonparty organization of these duties.” This was resisted by suggesting that it is better to 2378 revise current rule text as little as possible, and that “these duties” may not be sufficiently specific.
2379 It was agreed that the rule text should spell out the duties, that this is not a point where brevity is 2380 a virtue.

2381 Discussion returned to the question whether either alternative version calling for advance 2382 notice of witness names should go forward. Experience suggests that there are fewer disputes when 2383 people exchange more information. Perhaps further advice should be sought, as from the Federal 2384 Magistrate Judges rules committee? Judge Bates suggested that the discussion had moved to a 2385 point to support a decision whether to approve the revised Rule 30(b)(6) recommended by the 2386 Subcommittee. The draft Committee Note need not be included in the vote. If the proposal is 2387 approved, voting can turn to the alternatives that would require advance notice of witness identity, 2388 or at least assignment of unnamed witnesses to particular matters for examination. All of the 2389 Subcommittee recommended amendment is included in the alternatives, so this path avoids the 2390 prospect of approving an alternative and then gutting it. But it does not make sense to approve a 2391 recommendation that the Subcommittee proposed amendment be adopted, and also to approve 2392 publication for comment of an alternative. Only one proposal for adoption should be made, 2393 whether now or after a year’s delay for republication.

2394 A motion to recommend adoption of the Subcommittee’s proposed amended Rule 30(b)(6), 2395 with the style revision noted above, was approved, 12 votes for and 2 votes against. Discussion of 2396 Alternatives 2 and 2A began with the suggestion that if republication is approved, the Committee
2397 need not choose between the bracketed alternatives that would require 7, or 5, or only 3 days’
2398 notice of witness names. Committee practice has included publication of proposals with bracketed 2399 alternatives, or even with complete alternative provisions, as a means of stimulating comments on 2400 issues that seem likely to benefit from further discussion. A Committee member added that absent 2401 any opportunity to address the time for naming or allocating witnesses in comments on the 2402 published proposal, it would be a mistake for the Committee to attempt to choose a single time 2403 period in a republished proposal. A suggestion to narrow the focus by publishing with only 7- or 2404 3-day alternatives was met by a decision to set out all three alternative periods in brackets.

2405 A motion to approve publication of Alternative 2, including 30-day notice of a Rule
2406 30(b)(6) deposition, advance naming of organization witnesses, and alternative naming times of 7,
2407 5, or 3 days failed, 6 votes for and 9 votes against. A motion to approve publication of Alternative 2408 2A, including notice periods similar to Alternative 2, but requiring only advance designation of 2409 which matters for examination would be addressed by which unnamed witnesses failed, 2 votes
2410 for and 13 votes against. The first day’s discussion of Rule 30(b)(6) concluded with these votes.
2411 The questions raised by discussion of the draft Committee Note were carried forward for 2412 consideration on the next day of such revisions as might be prepared by the Subcommittee in 2413 overnight deliberations.

2414 Deliberations on the Committee Note resumed the next day. Judge Ericksen thanked Judge
2415 Goldgar for style suggestions. The revised draft retained the substance of the second paragraph,
2416 but with style improvements. The third paragraph was revised to make it clear that it does not 2417 suggest there is an obligation to confer about anything other than the matters for examination.

2418 Further style changes were suggested and accepted: “and enable the ~~responding party~~ 2419 organization to identify designate and * * *.

2420 The next suggestion was to recognize the value of discussing witness identity: “It may be 2421 productive also to discuss * * * the number and identity of witnesses * * *.” This suggestion was 2422 resisted, in part by offering an analogy to the changes in rule text. The published rule required 2423 discussion of the identity of each person the organization will designate to testify, and also 2424 discussion of the number of matters for examination. Both of these requirements were deleted from 2425 the amendments recommended for adoption. The references to each in the published Committee
2426 Note have been deleted. It would be a mistake to bring back a suggestion to discuss witness 2427 identity, even though it is a suggestion, not a command. Strong agreement was offered — bringing 2428 this back to the Note would seem to retract the revision of the rule text.

2429 The proponent responded that the suggestion is only precatory. And the comments showed 2430 that discussing the number of topics can be counterproductive. Efforts to reduce the number lead
2431 to increasingly broad and vague descriptions of the matters for examination. Many comments 2432 showed that witness identity is often discussed to good effect. A Note suggestion that it may be 2433 helpful to discuss witness identity is not likely to add much to the burden of conferring. Putting 2434 this in the Note does not imply a suggestion to discuss the number of matters for examination.
2435 Another participant agreed that there is no known tendency to interpret a Committee Note 2436 discussion of one topic to imply anything about a matter not discussed, much less to draw the 2437 implication from a decision to withdraw a provision that appeared in the rule text published for 2438 comment. The proponent added that courts do cite Committee deliberations in interpreting rules.

2439 Adding “and identity” of the witnesses was resisted. It would move back toward the 2440 published rule and Note that drew 1,780 comments, mostly negative on the requirement to confer
2441 about witness identity. Some comments said that this should not be in the Note. Another member 2442 agreed with this view. The rule text proposed for adoption does not impose a duty to discuss 2443 witness identity.

2444 Adding it to the Note might generate disputes. Another participant added that Committee
2445 Notes should not, and do not, give advice on how to practice law. Discussion continued with a 2446 question whether it would be wise to delete the entire sentence that enumerates issues that might 2447 be discussed. One member answered that it is useful to encourage the good practices identified in 2448 the public comments. Another suggested that “We’re giving useful advice, based on the public 2449 comment process, not telling people how to practice law.” Yet another member agreed generally, 2450 but opposed adding a suggestion to discuss witness identity. Discussing witness identity was 2451 removed from the published rule text for good reasons. A prompt in the Committee Note is not 2452 needed to enable discussion of witness identity by parties who wish to do so. The proponent 2453 rejoined that the discussion can be productive, and it is useful to remind the parties of its value.

2454 A different part of the draft Committee Note was addressed by asking what it means to 2455 advise about seeking guidance from the court if the discussion reaches “an impasse.” Professor 2456 Marcus replied that this sentence reflects a hope that the parties and the court will have used Rule
2457 16 to establish a procedure for resolving discovery disputes. We could leave it to Rule 26I
2458 protective order practice, “or to trying to iron it out as a deposition mess.”

2459 A reminder in the Note can help. The many suggestions in the 2018 Committee Note for 2460 amended Rule 23 provide a useful illustration. Judge Ericksen added that this Note sentence relates 2461 to the inability to agree about the matters for examination. Another Committee member observed 2462 that lawyers know they can seek the court’s guidance on discovery disputes. This sentence comes 2463 close to telling lawyers how to practice law. The suggestion to strike the entire sentence illustrating

2464 issues that it might be productive to discuss was renewed, along with a suggestion to delete the 2465 sentence on seeking court guidance when an impasse is reached. Lawyers will react to these 2466 observations in the Note, arguing that the Note says they should discuss these things but they do 2467 not want to.

2468 Another participant observed that “impasse” means “can’t move forward.” It is the 2469 organization that will want to take disputes to the court, not the noticing party. Judge Ericksen
2470 noted that there had been a lot of pressure to add an express objection procedure to Rule 30(b)(6).
2471 Many judges will not hear a dispute about the matters for examination without a Rule 26(c) motion
2472 for a protective order. Another participant noted that the comments sought some uniform method
2473 for resolving disputes. Some courts refuse to entertain Rule 26(c) motions before the deposition, 2474 insisting that disputes be brought to the court only as problems arise during the course of the 2475 deposition. The Subcommittee considered adopting an objection procedure and decided not to.
2476 The duty to confer expedites the process by starting with the conference that would have to precede 2477 any Rule 26(c) motion.

2478 Doubts about the “impasse” sentence were expressed in other terms. One question asked 2479 whether it adds anything of value. Another observation suggested that it may hint that there is an 2480 objection procedure, and will encourage arguments to the court that a party is not conferring in 2481 good faith. This discussion led to a suggestion to delete the Note statement that the obligation to 2482 confer in good faith “does not require the parties to reach agreement.”

2483 The participant who first asked about the meaning of “impasse” said that the discussion 2484 showed that this sentence can be useful to suggest that difficulties can be brought to the court by 2485 means short of a formal motion. They might be raised in a status conference, or by other means.

2486 Attention turned to this Note sentence: “The duty to confer continues if needed to fulfill 2487 the requirement of good faith.” Professor Marcus noted that good-faith conferring requirements
2488 appear in Rule 26I and Rule 37(a)(1). “Walking out of the room does raise an issue of good faith.”
2489 The purpose of requiring a conference could be defeated by an approach that automatically accepts 2490 “once is enough.” But it was rejoined that an earlier sentence already says that the process of 2491 conferring may often be iterative. Judge Ericksen agreed to delete the “continues if needed” 2492 sentence.

2493 Style suggestions were accepted, adding two words to the list of things it might be 2494 productive to discuss: “the number of witnesses and the matters on which each witness will testify
2495 * * *.” Another accepted suggestion was “The process of discussion ~~will~~ may ~~often~~ be iterative.”

2496 The Committee moved to voting on the Committee Note. The first paragraph was accepted 2497 without a formal vote. Adding “the” before matters on which each witness will testify was 2498 approved by vote, 10 for and 3 against. Adding a suggestion to discuss the identity of witnesses

2499 was rejected by vote, 2 for and 11 against. The Note language suggesting that it might be 2500 productive to discuss “the documents the noticing party intends to use during the deposition,” not 2501 earlier discussed, was challenged. Many comments opposed this practice as interfering with work-2502 product protections.

2503 A motion to delete this suggestion was adopted by vote, 8 for and 5 against. Another part 2504 of a sentence was challenged: “The process of conferring will often be iterative, and a single 2505 conference may not suffice.” A motion to delete the “single conference” clause was adopted by 2506 vote, 12 for and 1 against. The sentence stating that the amendment does not require the parties to 2507 reach agreement was examined next. A Committee member urged that it is important to say there 2508 is no obligation to agree.

2509 And a suggestion to combine this statement with the next sentence about seeking guidance
2510 from the court was resisted on the ground that a single sentence would discourage efforts to work
2511 things out in favor of running to the court. A motion was made to reorganize the sentence to read:
2512 “Consistent with Rule 1, the obligation is to confer in good faith about the matters for examination, 2513 but the amendment does not require the parties to reach agreement.” The motion was adopted, 10 2514 for and 3 against.

2515 A motion was made to revise the “impasse” sentence” to read: “In some circumstances, it 2516 may be desirable to seek guidance from the court.” The motion was adopted, 8 for and 5 against.

2517 A motion to strike the Note sentence stating that “The duty to confer continues if needed
2518 to fulfill the requirement of good faith” was adopted, 11 for and 1 against. (The Subcommittee
2519 Report recommendation to delete the preceding sentence from the Committee Note as published 2520 was accepted without discussion. This sentence read: “But the conference process must be 2521 completed a reasonable time before the deposition is scheduled to occur.”) A motion to adopt the 2522 final two paragraphs of the draft Committee Note was adopted, 13 for and 0 against.

2523 * * * * *

2524 It may be that the passage of time or change in Committee membership justify reopening 2525 this discussion, but it should be clear that the issues were carefully examined four years ago. The 2526 current Discovery Subcommittee was polled, and no member expressed an interest in returning 2527 to these issues at this time.

23-CV-I

Further to my email below and telephone conversation this morning with Staff Attorney Alison Bruff, Esq., I would like the Advisory Committee to formally consider an amendment to Rule 30(b)(6) that would provide as follows with my proposed language highlighted:

“In its notice or subpoena, a party may name as the deponent a public or private corporation, a partnership, an association, a governmental agency, or other entity and must describe with reasonable particularity the matters for examination. The named organization must designate one or more officers, directors, or managing agents, or designate other persons who consent to testify on its behalf; and it may set out the matters on which each person designated will testify. Before or promptly after the notice or subpoena is served, the serving party and the organization must confer in good faith about the matters for examination. A subpoena must advise a nonparty organization of its duty to confer with the serving party and to designate each person who will testify. The persons designated must testify about information known or reasonably available to the organization. As part of the deponent’s duty to confer in “good faith”, it shall identify the witness or witnesses who will testify as to each of the matters for which testimony is sought in the Notice of Deposition at least seven days prior to the deposition. Such identification shall include the name and business address of the witness, and position held within the deponent organization. This paragraph (6) does not preclude a deposition by any other procedure allowed by these rules.”

For “belt and suspenders” purposes, and because interrogatories are often used to inquire as to the identification of “persons with knowledge,” etc., I also propose a cognate amendment to Rule 33(a) to add the following as subsection (3):

“(3). An interrogatory may inquire as to the identification of any witness for whom a deponent is required to make a designation for testimony pursuant to a Notice of Deposition issued pursuant to Rule 30(b)(6) and the time for response to such interrogatory shall be governed by the time for such identification pursuant to Rule 30(b)(6).”

Thank you very much for your consideration. Please let me know if you need any further information.

Subject: Rule 30(b)(6)

I recently noted the following apparent hiatus in Rule 30(b)(6) as to the designation of organizational representatives for deposition testimony. I note the Committee’s work in achieving the 2020 Amendments that require a “meet and confer” prior to the deposition. The gap in the Rule that persists, at least in my view, is that there is no requirement for the party from whom testimony is sought, or non-party if a subpoena is used, as to when the designation of witness/disclosure of her/his identify must actually be made, and such designation should be disclosed, in relation to either the timing of the “meet and confer” session or the actual deposition itself. Simply stated, I do not see a requirement that the identity of the designated witness must be disclosed at any time prior to the deposition itself. Was this issue discussed at all during the last ‘cycle’ that produced the 2020 Amendments? In looking at the Advisory Committee Notes and excerpts of its Reports online, I did not see a reference to this specific issue.

If it is worthy of further consideration, please let me know the most appropriate way to place it before the Committee for such. Please feel free to contact me if you have any questions or suggestions. Thank you.

2528 19. Rule 11 – 23-CV-N

2529 Joseph Leckenby proposes an amendment to Rule 11(c)(1) as follows:

2530 (1) *In General. If, after notice and a reasonable opportunity to respond, the court
2531 determines that Rule 11(b) has been violated, the court may in its discretion impose 2532 an appropriate sanction on any attorney, law firm, or party that violated the rule or 2533 is responsible for the violation. However, if Congress has mandated by statute that 2534 Rule 11 sanctions be impose[d] for violations of Rule 11(b) which occur in suits
2535 brought under Federal statutes, then the court must impose sanctions. Absent 2536 exceptional circumstances, a law firm must be held jointly responsible for a 2537 violation committed by its partner, associate, or employee.

2538 Some background on Rule 11 may be useful in considering the current proposed 2539 amendment. Until 1983, the rule was not much noted, but in that year it was amended to broaden 2540 the availability of sanctions. The Third Circuit commissioned a book-length study of the effects of 2541 the amended rule. See Rule 11 in Transition (S. Burbank, ed., 1989). John Frank, a former member 2542 of the Advisory Committee, called the 1983 amendment “the most unfortunate exercise in 2543 rulemaking at least of the last 20 years.” John Frank, The Rules of Civil Procedure – Agenda for 2544 Reform, 137 U. Pa. L. Rev. 1883, 1886 (1989). Judge Schwarzer wrote in 1988 that “Rule 11 has 2545 become a significant factor in civil litigation, with an impact that has likely exceeded its drafters’ 2546 expectations.” William Schwarzer, Rule 11 Revisited, 101 Harv. L. Rev. 1013 (1988).

2547 In 1990, the Advisory Committee issued an unprecedented “call” for comments on whether 2548 the rule should be amended. See Call for Written Comments on Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of 2549 Civil Procedure and Related Rules, 131 F.R.D. 335 (1990). The FJC did an extensive study of the 2550 operation of the rule in five districts. See Elizabeth Wiggins, et al., The Federal Judicial Center’s 2551 Study of Rule 11, FJC Directions, Nov. 1991. After those comments were received, the Advisory 2552 Committee recommended revising the rule but still providing that the court “shall” impose
2553 sanctions for a violation of Rule 11(b). But the Judicial Conference changed “shall” to “may”. See 2554 Richard Marcus, Of Babies and Bathwater, 59 Brooklyn L. Rev. 761, 799 n.161. Justice Scalia
2555 dissented, stating that the amendments to the rule rendered it “toothless.” See 146 F.R.D. 401, 507 2556 (1993).

2557 Some, at least, seemed satisfied to have some of the rule’s teeth drawn. See, e.g., Stove
2558 Builder International, Inc. v. GHP Group, Inc., 280 F.R.D. 402, 403 (N.D. Ill. 2012) (referring to 2559 the “fang-drawing 1993 amendments”). Others have not applauded. From time to time, bills are 2560 introduced in Congress to undo some of the changes made to the rule in 1993. See, e.g., Lawsuit
2561 Abuse Reduction Act of 2017 (acronym LARA – not an invocation of Dr. Zhivago) (passed by 2562 the House in March, 2017, but not passed by the Senate).

2563 This proposal does not seek to change the rule generally, but only in a specific way – by 2564 requiring district courts to impose sanctions when “Congress has mandated by statute that Rule 11
2565 sanctions be impose[d] for violations of Rule 11(b) which occur in actions brought under Federal 2566 statutes.” The submission invokes Public Law 117-362 (Jan. 5, 2023), but that seems off point – it 2567 is the Bill Emerson Good Samaritan Food Donation Act.

2568 An example that does seem on point is the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act, as 2569 illustrated by Scott v. Vantage Corp., 64 F.4th 462 (3d Cir. 2023). In the PSLRA, Congress sought
2570 to “curb frivolous, lawyer-driven litigation” in part by modifying how the courts should apply Rule
2571 11. Id. at 467. Thus, it directs the courts to include specific findings regarding compliance with 2572 Rule 11(b) and directs that if it finds a violation the court “shall impose [Rule 11] sanctions.” It 2573 also creates a presumption that an appropriate sanction is imposing on the offending party a 2574 reasonable award of attorneys’ fees, but only if the court finds that the violation of the rule was a 2575 “substantial failure” to comply with the rule. Id. at 467-68.

2576 In Scott, the district court granted defendants’ motion for summary judgment, and plaintiff
2577 appealed, but the district court held in abeyance defendants’ Rule 11 motion. After the court of 2578 appeals affirmed the grant of summary judgment, the district court determined that plaintiffs did 2579 not violate Rule 11(b) in connection with their Rule 10b-5 claim, which was the “heart of the 2580 complaint,” but that they had violated the rule in making claims about forbidden trading in 2581 unregistered securities. Given that the 10b-5 claim was central, the district court declined to impose
2582 sanctions on the ground that the rule violation was not “a substantial violation under the PSLRA.”
2583 Id. at 471.

2584 After considering the analysis of the PSLRA adopted by the Second and Fourth Circuits, 2585 the Third Circuit concluded that the district court did not abuse its discretion in declining to make 2586 an award of attorney’s fees as a sanction. Id. at 475-76. But the court also held that the district
2587 court did abuse its discretion in declining to impose any sanction “[b]ecause the text of the PSLRA
2588 makes the imposition of sanctions mandatory after a court determines that a party violated Rule
2589 11.” Id. at 476. Thus (id. at 477):

2590 On remand, the District Court is instructed to impose, in its discretion, some form
2591 of sanction against Plaintiffs in accordance with Rule 11. We take no position on 2592 what a proper sanction would be here, acknowledging as we must that the District
2593 Court is better situated to make that determination. We do note that the available 2594 options run the gamut from an award of attorneys’ fees – as [defendant] initially 2595 requested – to “a written order admonishing by name the individual lawyers
2596 responsible for the Rule 11(b) violations the district court identified in [Plaintiff’s]
2597 complaint.”

2598 The submission emphasizes the separation of powers underlying our governmental 2599 structure. It seems that the case cited and described above adheres to that structure. Congress 2600 included special provisions about Rule 11 in the PSLRA, and the court of appeals in this case (and 2601 seemingly in the Second and Fourth Circuit cases discussed by the Third Circuit) has adhered to 2602 that structure. So the illustrative case seems to show that the proposed amendment is not needed.

2603 And the submission does not suggest what other statutes than PSLRA would qualify as 2604 mandating that Rule 11 sanctions be imposed. There may be none. The one bill that has arisen on 2605 occasion – LARA – has not been limited (as the proposed amendment is limited) to claims based 2606 on federal statutes.

2607 It is recommended that this submission be dropped from the agenda.

Letter Requesting a Change to Rule 11

To: H. Thomas Byron III, Secretary
Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure
From: Joseph Leckenby
Date: May 10, 2023
Re: Proposed change to USCS Fed Rules Civ Proc R 11(c)(1)

Dear Secretary H. Thomas Byron III,

I, a private citizen of the United States of America, am submitting a proposed change to USCS Fed Rules Civ Proc R 11(c)(1). See Appendix A.

The United States of America is a nation built upon checks and balances, with each of three branches of government working hard to ensure that its two sister branches do not wield undue control over the government. The idea of checks and balances has been cited in several court cases. See Bond v. U.S., 564 U.S. 211, 223 (2011) (noting that individuals, too, are protected by the operations of separation of powers and checks and balances); Carrick v. Locke, 125 Wash. 2d 129, 135 (1994) (stating “The different branches must remain partially intertwined if for no other reason than to maintain an effective system of checks and balances, as well as an effective government.”); and Ralston v. State, 522 P.3d 95, 101 (Wash. Ct. App. 2022) (stating “good government is better assured by allowing the branches to check each other's exercise of powers in certain circumstances in order to stop a single branch from overreaching.”)

As one of the three branches of government, Congress has tried to prevent frivolous lawsuits. Attempting to curb abusive class action lawsuits, in 1995, Congress passed the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act of 1995 (PSLRA). The PSLRA mandates that Rule 11 sanctions be issued for violations that occur in actions brought under the statute. See 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4-(c)(2) (LexisNexis, Lexis Advance through Public Law 117-362, approved January 5, 2023) (stating in part “If the court makes a finding under paragraph (1) that a party or attorney violated any requirement of Rule 11(b)... the court shall impose sanctions on such party or attorney in accordance with Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.”) (emphasis added). In the case of Scott v. Vantage Corp., 64 F.4th 462 (3d Cir. 2023), the court held that a court must impose Rule 11 sanctions if a statute requires it to do so. Id. (Holding that a district court abused its discretion when it did not impose sanctions as the PSLRA required it to do).

However, USCS Fed Rules Civ Proc R 11(c)(1) does not explicitly a court to impose Rule 11 sanctions if a statute requires it to do so. See Id. (using the permissive word “may”). My proposed amendment makes it clear that congress has the power to mandate Rule 11 sanctions in specific circumstances while also balancing judicial discretion in other circumstances.

Sincerely,
Joseph D. Leckenby

APPENDIX A – PROPOSED AMENDED RULE

The amended Fed. R. Civ. P. 11(c)(1) would read as follows, with the new proposed language in underscore:

(1) *In General. If, after notice and a reasonable opportunity to respond, the court determines that Rule 11(b) has been violated, the court may in its discretion impose an appropriate sanction on any attorney, law firm, or party that violated the rule or is responsible for the violation. However, if Congress has mandated by statute that Rule 11 sanctions be impose for violations of Rule 11 (b) which occur in suits brought under Federal statutes, then the court must impose sanctions. Absent exceptional circumstances, a law firm must be held jointly responsible for a violation committed by its partner, associate, or employee.

2608 20. Rule 53 – 23-CV-O

2609 Anthony Buonopane, seemingly a member of the New England Law Review and a student 2610 at that law school, has submitted what looks like a student Note or Comment about Rule 53. It 2611 should be included in this agenda book.

2612 The thrust of the piece is that Rule 53 “should be amended so that special masters are held 2613 to a fiduciary duty standard type of relationship.”

2614 Rule 53 issues caused the Advisory Committee to create a Rule 53 Subcommittee chaired 2615 by Judge Shira Scheindlin, and it rewrote the rule to take account of modern conditions. The 2616 amended rule took effect in 2003. As the Committee Note introduced the amendment, the rule ‘is 2617 revised extensively to reflect changing practices in using masters.’ It was based on in-depth FJC
2618 research. See Willging, Hooper, Leary, Miletich, Reagan & Shapard, Special Masters’ Incidence 2619 and Activity (FJC 2000).

2620 In order to ensure transparency, Rule 53(b) was amended to provide directions for the order 2621 appointing a master specifying, among other things, the master’s duties, the circumstances in 2622 which masters may engage in ex parte communications, and the records the master must retain and 2623 file as a record of the activities undertaken.

2624 As did the prior rule, the current rule prescribes that masters may hold trial proceedings or 2625 make recommended findings of fact only when there is “some exceptional condition” to justify 2626 that responsibility. Concerns on this score were recently raised by Senators Tillis and Leahy about 2627 a judge who supposedly had been enlisting masters with science backgrounds to handle a large 2628 docket of patent infringement cases. As the senators recognized, this judge’s practice seemed 2629 difficult to square with what the rule said.

2630 It is less clear what problem Mr. Buonopane is addressing, or how he proposes that it be 2631 solved by a rule amendment. His title states his purpose:

2632 SPECIAL MASTERS NEED TO BE REIGNED IN: WHY RULE FIFTY-THREE 2633 OF THE FEDERAL RULES OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SHOULD BE AMENDED
2634 SO THAT SPECIAL MASTERS ARE HELD TO A FIDUCIARY STANDARD
2635 TYPE OF RELATIONSHIP AND RECOMMENDATIONS ON HOW TO DO SO

2636 Largely using contemporary media sources, he offers a number of notable instances in 2637 which masters have been used in recent years, including the appointment of a special master to 2638 review documents seized at Mar-a-Lago. As he notes, the court of appeals held that the judge 2639 should not have appointed the master in that situation.

2640 The notion of a “fiduciary duty” can pose challenges in some contexts, such as with regard 2641 to investment advisors. Although Rule 53 prescribes the method for appointing masters and the 2642 responsibilities they are to have, it does not use this term.

2643 The problem the paper addresses is “how to address what happens when a special master 2644 abuses their limited (but potentially great) power, and what remedies could be available for any 2645 such violations.” Seemingly disregarding the comprehensive 2003 amendments to the rule, the

2646 author cites a 1986 article by Magistrate Judge Wayne Brazil for the proposition that there are 2647 “virtually no procedural safeguards” under the rule. But the 2003 amendment were designed to 2648 provide such safeguards and focus the court, the parties, and the master on the important concerns.

2649 The piece does cite instances of misbehavior by a master. For example, in Cardoza v.
2650 Pacific States Steel Corp., 320 F.3d 989 (9th Cir. 2003), the master had misappropriated more than 2651 $1 million, and engaged in other self-dealing. The article urges cites a news website for the 2652 proposition that financial incentives can trigger unethical behavior.

2653 The solution, the submission says, is to use the fiduciary duty standard “that reaches 2654 multiple areas of law.” As an example, the author cites the famous Cardozo opinion in Meinhard
2655 v. Salmon, 249 N.Y. 458 (1928). It does not appear that the examples given are about procedural 2656 rules. And the author also notes that Rule 52 “might already itself subtly endorse this idea with its 2657 language.”

2658 Turning to the proposed fiduciary standard, the author invokes the Restatement of Agency
2659 and the Uniform Partnership Act.

2660 But nowhere does it say what amendment should be adopted, or how a Civil Rule could 2661 more effectively prescribe the sort of duty the SEC has introduced for some investment advisors.
2662 There is no question that appointment of masters is important, but there is no indication that the 2663 2003 amendments have failed to provide the needed procedural guidance.

2664 It is recommended that this submission be removed from the agenda.

SPECIAL MASTERS NEED TO BE REIGNED IN: WHY RULE FIFTY-THREE OF THE FEDERAL RULES OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SHOULD BE AMENDED SO THAT SPECIAL MASTERS ARE HELD TO A FIDUCIARY STANDARD TYPE OF RELATIONSHIP AND RECOMMENDATIONS ON HOW TO DO SO.

By: Anthony Buonopane

Abstract:

Special masters can play vital roles in the litigation process, whether it be in assisting with aspects of discovery, the awarding of damages, or any other area of litigation where it might be difficult for a court to case-manage a complex issue on its own. However, a problem arises when special masters go beyond their limited scope of power, and in determining how courts and litigants can and should sanction that behavior. This paper dives into this history of special masters, this exact concern, and proposes using federal rulemaking to add a fiduciary relationship—a standard that exists in other areas of law—to Rule 53’s issue when it comes to disciplining special masters and holding them accountable.

Introduction:

Why do courts use special masters? Their origin, like most of this country's legal foundation, dates back to old-England. King Edward I was overwhelmed with petitions, and asked his lord chancellors to help sort through them. In turn, those same lord chancellors used clerks, called 'masters,' to assist them in dividing petitions.<sup>1</sup> Quite simply, King Edward couldn't manage the insurmountable task and his chancellors used what we would call 'special masters' as a form of delegating responsibilities. Today, the United States carries on the idea of special masters under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure. Rule 53 allows the court to appoint special masters to (a) perform duties that the parties to litigation consent to, (b) make findings of facts under certain conditions, and (c) address pretrial and posttrial matters that would be difficult for the judge to do.<sup>2</sup> Essentially, the special master is someone who serves a limited purpose for the court to do things the parties want it to do, to make some difficult findings of facts, or do things that would be impractical for a judge to do or administer. In this function, like the clerks that King Edward's chancellors were, special masters are necessary as a matter of efficiency and delegation.

There are many famous examples of special masters serving this exact purpose. Following the tragedy of the September 11th, 2001 terrorist attacks, Congress created the 9/11 Victim's Compensation Fund (originally) as a method to pay the victims' families in lieu of filing lawsuits against the airlines and other potentially liable entities.<sup>3</sup> Given the nature of potential number of claimants (thousands), and the sheer amount of money involved, it is easy to see why the judiciary itself might struggle with administering funds and determining how much money each family could get. Thus, Attorney General John Ashcroft appointed mediation attorney Kenneth Feinberg to be the special master tasked with doing exactly this. Feinberg, who also administered funds for victims of the BP oil disaster and the Boston Marathon bombing, spent 33 months administering over $7 billion to victims' families.<sup>4</sup>

Another famous example is the appointment of John Cooper as special master in the Waymo v. Uber suit to determine if Uber had purposely withheld a letter in discovery.<sup>5</sup> Or even more recently, former President Trump filed a lawsuit over classified documents that were seized from his Mar-a-Lago resort and District Judge Cannon appointed retired judge Raymond Dearie to review if any of the documents were privileged (the lawsuit was subsequently dismissed, holding the special master appointment to be an improper exercise of jurisdiction since it blocked a government investigation after execution of a warrant).<sup>6</sup> Thus, whether it be distributing damages, investigating a potential discovery violation, reviewing a series of documents for potential privileges, or any of the other functions that a special master could serve, they play an integral role in our court systems.

The problem this paper outlines then, is how to address what happens when a special master abuses their limited (but potentially great) power, and what remedies could be available for any such violations. Part 1 of this paper will address the problems with special masters, including instances where they have or could violate their duties. Part 2 will explain the history of the fiduciary relationship, how it works in other contexts, and what it means for people held to such a standard. Part 3 finally, will explain why federal rulemaking is the best avenue for this potential change and what a potential amendment to Rule 53 could look like and the reasons as to why.

Part 1: The Problem with Special Masters

It is very clear that special masters can and have been quite useful in many high-profile cases and legal situations. But they also have plenty of concerns and issues in their use. Generally speaking, one concern is that special masters could end up doing the opposite of what we think they do; rather than make trials cheaper and more efficient, they could actually make them more costly and delay them.<sup>7</sup> In the context of fact finding investigations, if a special master's fact finding is extensive and lengthy, it could prove costly to the parties whom not only have to wait for the special master's report to the judge, but then reargue the report in front of the judge who reviews the master's report de novo.<sup>8</sup> It is also important to note that special masters also have virtually no procedural safeguards attached to their roles, a concern especially apparent when they conduct out-of-court investigations or similar work. Unlike a court appointed expert, they are not deposed, don't often testify at trial, and aren't subject to cross examination.<sup>9</sup> These concerns all raise questions as to how parties to litigation can hold special masters accountable, especially when one or both parties are usually responsible for paying for the special master.<sup>10</sup>

Those same concerns speak to a different issue: how much discretion a special master should have in the context of what they do. Two approaches exist to this. The first, says that master should have lots of discretion since they'll know the parties more intimately than the judge could, and their needs will likely evolve as their task goes on, meaning informality is the most efficient way to proceed.<sup>11</sup> The other theory says judge's should reign tight control over special masters and force them to file reports frequently or else the judge may learn too little about the case and be unable to verify the master's work effectively or control the parties (and thus, likely to give extreme deference).<sup>12</sup> Without a standard of liability on a special master, both approaches could have dangerous consequences.

A relaxed approach means that special masters have complete control. They essentially become the judge or arbitrator for certain aspects of litigation—taking the parties farther away from judicial review and from the judge themselves. A party could have great concerns with this approach given the fact that the judge is ultimately the one who decides the important legal questions, yet is left out of what could be particularly important or complex parts of the litigation. Parties would want to do everything in their power to ensure that a special master's recommendations, reports, etc. are favorable to them then, and thus will focus their attention on the special master's work. This will add time, cost (especially to the client), and energy that may ultimately take away from the litigation. And with no real way to hold these special master's accountable after the judge makes a de novo ruling of a special master's reports, or check the special master's work themselves, a party who loses at the special master stage (that is to say whatever the special master finds, reports, etc. is unfavorable to them) under this broad theory of power could face an insurmountable hurdle to overcome throughout the remainder of the litigation.

On the other hand, a stricter theory could be seen as unfavorable to the parties too. If a judge manages every aspect of the special master's work, the judge could be seen as stepping in-between the parties more so than they normally do. For example, most judges strongly dislike discovery disputes and would rather see the parties themselves deal with things civilly (especially since its usually the costliest part of trial).<sup>13</sup> If a judge hires a special master to oversee a discovery issue and micromanages that special master's work, the judge could be getting a glimpse into an area of the litigation that departs from the judicial norm in which they normally stay away from. And while it may be true that this way of managing special master's might subdue the accountability issues of the other extreme, this theory itself has its own flaws. An example such as this would force attorneys themselves to depart from the informal, casual nature of an area of litigation like discovery—potentially impacting their litigation strategy, the cost of trial for their clients (if they must adhere to proper formalities and spend more time formulating more official discovery requests or production), any potential amicable relationships they had previously with opposing counsel, and other traditional litigation norms that they must now depart from. Plainly then, both extremes cause problems in their own respect, and both exist because parties don't have access rigid rules that can hold special masters accountable.

Another related issue with special masters that arises is their neutrality. As a matter of common sense, it would seem obvious that special masters should remain neutral in whatever aspect of the litigation they are tasked with working on since they essentially are filling the roles of a judge, the ultimate symbol of neutrality in litigation, in complicated parts of a case. That however, may not always be the case which presents another problem for parties. David Cohen, an attorney who has been a special master for many federal cases, described that remaining neutral “isn't easy.”<sup>14</sup> And there is a serious question as to why this glorified judge's assistant, as Cohen described special masters to be, couldn't be neutral.<sup>15</sup> One potential reason is that a special master might not always be a lawyer, and thus is not aware of, or bound to, the same ethical considerations of neutrality that judges and lawyers might be. This happens more often in patent cases when a judge might need someone with the technological expertise related to the patent.<sup>16</sup> Lawyers in these situations might become particularly weary of a special master's ability to remain neutral or ability to understand what neutrality means—thus potentially prejudicing their client.

More apparent though when thinking about the issue of neutrality amongst special masters might come into play when discussing their compensation on matters, especially if it is ted to the litigation itself. This was exactly the issue in Cordoza v. Pacific States Steel Corporation. Here, the defendant had left the medical plan for their retired steelworkers bankrupt, prompting an Employee Retirement Income Security Act (hereafter “ERISA”) claim against them.<sup>17</sup> After finding an ERISA violation, the judge in the matter ordered the defendant to keep paying the medical benefits. The problem was that the defendant didn’t have enough money to do so. Thus, the court hired Bruce Train and his associates to develop a contaminated plant site owned by the defendants as the means of paying the medical benefits.<sup>18</sup> One of the unique issues here though is that part of Bruce Train’s compensation was tied to an interest in the land. While Train had begun to do what he was tasked with, negotiations to develop part of the plant site stalled because Train had sought more compensation.<sup>19</sup> A final investigation proved that Train: “had (1) rejected valid offers from the RDA in order to hold out for more compensation for himself, (2) misappropriated creditors’ funds by forming a $1 million litigation war chest, (3) paid for personal tax advice with PSSC funds, and (4) overbilled for a legal assistant.”<sup>20</sup>

Train was eventually forced to disgorge some of his wages, sanctioned, and had his earnings capped—all of which was upheld by the 9th Circuit.<sup>21</sup> While there was an amicable solution to the special master’s clear abuse of neutrality here, it only happened after years and extensive judicial investigation—all of which cost the court time, money, and effort, and likely caused unease amongst the plaintiffs who wanted to secure their medical benefits. This more broadly speaks to the issue of potential earnings eroding a special master’s ability to remain neutral. Psychology backs this up. One study found a link between money and corruption, seeing that a controlled group exposed to money-related activities were more likely to be unethical as compared to a controlled group that was not exposed to money.<sup>22</sup> Other studies also linked dishonesty and deception with an ability to earn money.<sup>23</sup> Special masters, like Train, would be no different. Even if a black-and-white rule were to exist that no special master fees can have any tie to the litigation, special masters could still do things that contribute to this unethical behavior (such as bill more hours than what is required and prolong their work to make more money if paid on an hourly rate). And while a court itself may sanction special masters for doing such acts, the litigants themselves are without a standard to base any appeal themselves on.

Thus, whether it be the length of a special master's work, the amount of intervention a judge exercises in a special master's work, or a special master's ability to remain neutral, being without a standard exposes the use of special master's to several potential problems. The parties themselves have no way to hold special master's accountable, potentially putting them in a detrimental position in the litigation. Special masters are designed to make the court's life easier in complex cases and situations, but in turn, it might be doing the opposite. Cordoza was an example of why, and there is likely plenty more that we do (and perhaps do not) know about. The only way to fix that issue, is to develop a fiduciary standard to Rule 53 and give parties a basis to appeal special master's decisions through the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

A fiduciary duty is a legal concept that reaches multiple areas of law: businesses, lawyer-client, other confidential types of relationships, etc. and requires that a person acting within this relationship to only act in ways that will benefit the other person—in other words, act in the other person’s best interest.<sup>24</sup> The fiduciary is the person who owes the duty to act towards the benefit of the other person, and the beneficiary (sometimes called principal) is the person who benefits in this relationship.<sup>25</sup> Generally speaking this idea exists as a tool to protect interests of a beneficiary when someone represents them in some kind of capacity.<sup>26</sup> This duty even dates back as early as 1790 B.C. under the Code of Hammurabi, creating rules surrounding persons entrusted with the property of others for business.<sup>27</sup>

There are many famous examples of which this duty has been spelled out in litigation. In the business context, Meinhard v. Salmon is the most prominent case. In Meinhard, the court found the duty of loyalty breached by one co-adventurer (partner named Salmon) of a leasing business to another. Salmon created a new leasing deal for the property that would take place following the close of his current leasing deal with his co-adventurer, and did not disclose this business opportunity to his co-adventurer (essentially going behind his partner’s back). <sup>27</sup> Atherton, Susan C.; Blodgett, Mark S.; and Atherton, Charles A. (2011) "Fiduciary Principles: Corporate Responsibilities to Stakeholders," Journal of Religion and Business Ethics: Vol. 2, Article 5.

Cardozo, writing the opinion for the New York Court of Appeals just a few years before he would enter the Supreme Court, said:

Joint adventurers, like copartners, owe to one another, while the enterprise continues, the duty of the finest loyalty. Many forms of conduct permissible in a workaday world for those acting at arm's length, are forbidden to those bound by fiduciary ties. A trustee is held to something stricter than the morals of the market place. Not honesty alone, but the punctilio of an honor the most sensitive, is then the standard of behavior.<sup>28</sup>

Justice Cardozo is essentially spelling out the difference here. That even if in a normal context (here a business undertaking), the conduct undertaken by the fiduciary was permissible, the mere existence of the fiduciary relationship transcends normal conduct and forces one to act with the “finest loyalty.” Likewise, in Graphic Directions, Inc. v. Bush, the Colorado Court of Appeals said that an employee-agent (fiduciary) who solicits their employers cliental as they prepare to depart the business to start their own also violates that duty of loyalty, the same transcending type of commitment that Justice Cardozo discussed in the Meinhard case.<sup>29</sup>

Aside from this duty, the duty of care was illustrated most prominently in Smith v. Van Gorkum. Here, the CEO of a company negotiated a merger (to which senior management disapproved) and the board of directors voted to approve after a two-hour meeting, based on an oral presentation with no merger document review. The Delaware Supreme Court found this to violate the duty of care. Justice Horsey explained that being a fiduciary is more than just abstaining from bad faith and fraud, but rather forces a director to have an affirmative duty to protect the beneficiary’s interest—meaning they must examine information with a “critical eye,” (care).<sup>30</sup> Again, this is another instance in which a court is recognizing that a fiduciary duty transcends normal activities. It wasn't enough that the board of directors weren't approving the merger with malice or bad intent (against the shareholders), but rather they had to take care and exercise reasoned decision in the choices they made because of the special relationship they hold with the shareholders of a company.

As these examples illustrate, in modern application, fiduciary duties require more from the fiduciary than what is asked of a normal layperson because of the special nature of the relationship itself and the overarching goal of protecting the beneficiary's interest. There are many different kinds of duties that could be placed on a fiduciary including the duties of: loyalty, care, good faith, prudence, etc., all of which could be relevant to special masters.<sup>31</sup> What they mean generally, are values that should be undertaken in any adaptation of a fiduciary relationship for special masters.

At its core, the duty of loyalty is the duty that speaks to preventing a fiduciary from violating conflicts of interest. This includes both personal interests of the fiduciary that are conflicting with the beneficiary's interests and duties the fiduciary owes to someone else conflicting with the beneficiary's.<sup>32</sup> Some also say that the duty of loyalty encompasses a duty to not profit off of the beneficiary's interest when completing their fiduciary duties.<sup>33</sup> Plainly this duty is exactly what a layman would think it means, being loyal to whomever is owed the loyalty—the beneficiary. In the special master context, the duty of loyalty could prove to be very important. The idea of not profiting off of the work would have been a principle that special master Train would have directly violated in Cordoza and subject him to discipline. Further, it gives a blanket standard for lawyers to examine special masters within litigation. If their primary duty of loyalty is to the court (as explained in Part 3), then any concerns about neutrality, the influence of money, and potential biases becomes moot.

The duty of care encapsulates the duty of good faith and the duty of prudence inside of it. Generally, exercising a duty of care means to pursue the beneficiary's interests with reasonable diligence and prudence.<sup>34</sup> Further, some standards require a standard of good faith (i.e., acting in reasonable manner towards the beneficiary's interest, similar to negligence).<sup>35</sup> Essentially, if the duty of loyalty speaks to who's interest should be kept in mind when completing work, the duty of care speaks to the how that work must be accomplished. The main goals are essentially competence and diligence. This standard subdues many of the potential problems a standardless use of special masters endures. If a special master is forced to exercise this kind of care, a judge will not need to worry about micromanaging a special master's work since it will be done diligently and with good faith. The parties themselves will not need to worry about overdue costs or delays of trial since the special master must be zealous and do their work in good faith.

As such, the fiduciary duties of care and loyalty, which encapsulate many other important principles and duties in a fiduciary relationship, could protect against all the earlier raised concerns. The Federal Rule of Civil Procedure on special masters, Rule 53, might already itself subtly endorse this idea with its language. For example, the subsection on the authority of a special master says they may "take all appropriate measures to perform the assigned duties fairly and efficiently."<sup>36</sup> The specific diction here of "appropriate," or "fairly and efficiently," sound eerily similar what a duty of care statute might say about diligence and reasonableness. Further, another area of the rule states that the master can't have relationships with the parties or the parties' attorneys (unless consented to with court approval.<sup>37</sup> This vaguely mirrors the concept of the duty of loyalty and its overarching goal of preventing potential conflicts from existing. Thus, a fiduciary rule change is the best way to proceed.

Part 3: Why a Fiduciary Standard Should be Proposed and What it Might Look Like:

Before deciphering what potential fiduciary standards could look like, or should consider, it is important to determine why federal rulemaking is the appropriate method for change. Federal Rulemaking begins with the Advisory Committee, who scrutinizes proposals and eventually proposes some as amendments to the Standing Committee. The Standing Committee reviews the changes themselves and sends them to the Judicial Conference if they choose to do so. The Judicial Conference does the same and sends them to the final stop, the Supreme Court. If the Supreme Court is satisfied with the change, they'll officially promulgate the rule before May 1st, with effect taking place usually around December 1st (but not before) of that same year. Congress may themselves step in and enact legislation if they aren't satisfied with the Supreme Court's decision, but this rarely happens.<sup>38</sup>

This elongated measure of rulemaking is the best method to create a special master fiduciary standard. Firstly, the composition of the decision makers in this process proves why. The Advisory Committee consists of a diverse group of legal professionals: judges, lawyers, state chief justices, government lawyers, etc., meaning most of these members either litigate or have exposure to the concept of fiduciary duties (unlike members of Congress) and do so in different ways.<sup>39</sup> Generally it also seems wise to let the people who will engage with these concepts the most be the ones who adopt the rules around them. While Congress could itself step in as warranted by the rulemaking process, it would be unwise since the judiciary itself is best equipped to “alter rules more deftly and with greater precision than could Congress.”<sup>40</sup> Thus, the decision makers have the greatest ability to develop these rules in a meaningful way.

When thinking about what the amendment to Rule 53 itself should look like, the rule itself should consist of two core elements: (1) the fiduciary relationship defined, and the duties therein and (2) the review process and remedies for a breach of fiduciary duties by a special master. It is critical not only to define who is the beneficiary and who is the fiduciary and why, but explain how to sanction any violations of this rule. Otherwise, the standard itself would be deficient and useless. It would also be wise to look upon fiduciary restatements in other contexts as a guide for how to formulate or draft these fiduciary standards.

The fiduciary duty itself should consist of a duty of care and loyalty by special masters to the courts (the judge in the litigation) themselves. The special master is an extension of the judge, and is doing tasks difficult for the judge themselves to oversee. Thus, the duties belong to the judge as the beneficiary. What might need to be unique about this defined duty however, is that it should also explicitly give standing to the litigants as third parties as well (i.e., for the parties to be able to appeal to the court that the special master is not conforming to its fiduciary duty). This is because ultimately whatever the special master is tasked with doing will affect the litigation to some degree, and the parties should have rights then in the same way they'd have rights against the judge to a trial.

Specifically, when thinking of the duty of care within this standard, business law provides the best guidance. The Restatement 3rd of Agency Law describes that agents need to act with care, competence, and diligence that is normally exercised by other agents in a similar circumstance.<sup>41</sup> Further, other provisions require the agent to act within the scope of their actual (directly stated) authority and refrain from conduct that is likely to damage the principle's enterprise (good faith).<sup>42</sup> Similarly, a special master should be diligent, competent, and careful in their handling of matters within a case, they should only act within the scope of what a judge hired them to do, and they should refrain from undertaking acts that damage the court's reputation or ability administer justice fairly. What this Restatement doesn't include that a duty of care element might want to would be to explicitly say that diligence or prudence should include not prolonging their duties if not necessary (to protect the parties from paying more than necessary). All of this will alleviate parties' concerns about the time and effort expended by the use of special masters and allow judges to trust the discretion of a special master.

When discussing the duty of loyalty, the Revised Uniform Partnership Act (hereafter "RUPA") and Restatement 3rd of Agency provide guidance. RUPA outlines that a partner can't compete with the partnership, deal with someone who has an adverse interest to the partnership, and must hold all profit for the partnership itself.<sup>43</sup> Meanwhile, The Restatement 3rd, which has a much more expansive duty of loyalty, outlines that an agent can't acquire a material benefit from the fiduciary relationship, act on behalf of an adverse party, compete with the principal, or use the principal's information for their own benefit.<sup>44</sup> Likewise any loyalty provision for special masters should encompass many of these values: they should not profit in any way from the duties encompassed to them as special master (i.e. elongate their duties for more money, or hold out on transactions for more contingent payment like in Cardozo). Further, special masters should only act on behalf of the court and not advocate for, or give special treatment to, one of the parties since the special master is an extension of the judge themselves. It might be wise however to also include a provision under this duty defining neutrality. Black's Law dictionary defines a neutral party as a party who is impartial, and has no financial or personal interest in a controversy or dispute.<sup>45</sup> Something like this would be an adequate definition, put special masters on notice of the fact they must be neutral against the parties, and further reinforce the idea that they cannot seek financial personal gain from their employment as special master. Thus, the duty of loyalty here would be sufficient.

Lastly, it is important to think about remedies when a special master breaks their fiduciary relationship. The duty itself creates personal liability upon the fiduciary, thus giving them a reason<sup>46</sup> to want to adhere to these standards. The potential rule should state that the parties themselves could bring a claim of breach of fiduciary duty at any time before a jury verdict under Rule 53, or the judge themselves if they find the special master's conduct to be improper. This will allow everyone who plays a role in the litigation, that is to say everyone who could be impacted by the special master's decisions, to have a say if the special master does something wrong. A policy like that only seems fair. Further, if the parties bring a violation under

Rule 53, there should be a hearing where the party must prove the breach by a preponderance of the evidence (to keep it consistent with the trial standard). If the judge finds a violation themselves, they should just have to state the reasons why in writing, and dictate why it meets the preponderance of the evidence. Lastly, the provision itself should give the special master or the other party to the case, the right to appeal a decision on the breach of fiduciary duty simply as a matter of due process.

When thinking about the penalties themselves, outside of the expected penalties: fines, suspension or firing from the role, recommendation of discipline to the Bar, etc., it is important to consider remedial solutions to the work the special master did on the trial itself. One idea might be to give the judge broad discretion, take any measure as necessary to return the trial to a position it was before the special master breached their fiduciary duty, or to return the trial to a position where it is if the special master never breached their fiduciary duty. This, as one could imagine, could give the judge the power to do a lot of creative things to return the trial to normal. This should be seen as desirable since the goal is to remediate the failures of someone who was meant to be loyal to the court, be an extension of the judge themselves, and help solve a complicated part of litigation. Along with this broad standard though, some specific penalties, as guidance, might be wise to include such as: holding the special master responsible for one or both parties' attorney fees from trial, order a new trial (if necessary), delay trial, give the parties an extended number of discovery requests (such as interrogatories), etc. These solutions all remediate this problem effectively. While this recommendation is not perfect, it shows that a fiduciary standard can solve all the problems a special master presents and create a way to return trial to a normal position as if the violation never occurred.

Conclusion:

Special masters are an important piece of civil litigation. They do however, present many problems that could hamper the fairness of trial for the parties and make special masters themselves self-interested parties. A fiduciary relationship, an area of law famous for keeping representatives of one party in line with the interests of that beneficiary, could be the solution. Forcing the special master to adhere to duties of loyalty and care, and creating sensible remedies to violations of those duties, can help special masters continue to be the useful tool they are in assisting with complicated areas of litigation.

2665 21. Rule 10 – 23-CV-Q

2666 Submission 23-CV-Q, from Richie Muniak, recommends that Rule 10 be amended to add 2667 a new requirement for pleadings that there be a “Document of Direction of Claims” [DoDoC], 2668 designed to “create a visual method of showing claims against different parties in a suit that 2669 contains multiple plaintiffs or defendants.” Such a requirement would “make things easier for all 2670 parties and the court [by] creating a visual attachment to pleadings” to illustrate the various claims 2671 and parties involved. Indeed, “documents like this are already being made internally by judges and 2672 clerks.”

2673 The submission includes two attachments, seemingly modeled on a DoDoC used in a case
2674 in the N.D. Ohio, reportedly taking three hours to create by “working backwards” in the middle of 2675 the case. The suggestion is that each party could “amend” its DoDoC as the case moved forward 2676 to take account of changes in the party structure or the claims made.

2677 It is also suggested that “a legal tech company could produce a website to generate this 2678 diagram rather quickly.” Indeed, Mr. Muniak says that “I have created the start of a software that 2679 would allow lawyers and clerks to do this easily.”

2680 The submission does not propose specific amended rule language, but does urge that rule 2681 10 be amended to require such a diagram that “shall visually indicate all parties and the number 2682 and types of claims between each.” There is a suggestion that this requirement might apply only 2683 in actions with a certain number of claims or of parties.

2684 Rule 10 is not a rule that has received much Advisory Committee attention since it was 2685 adopted in 1938. Indeed, except for restyling in 2007, it has not been amended at all. Rule 10(a)
2686 provides directions about the format of pleadings; perhaps the DoDoC idea could be added there.
2687 Rule 10(b) exhorts parties to set forth claims and defenses in “numbered paragraphs, each limited 2688 as far as practicable to a single set of circumstances.” rule 10(c) provides that any exhibit to a 2689 pleading is a part of the pleading for all purposes, including Rule 12(b) motions. This provision 2690 has sometimes generated litigation when a moving party seeks to put before the court materials
2691 relied upon but not actually attached as an exhibit to the challenged pleading, leading to disputes
2692 about whether under Rule 12(d) the court may consider the document in ruling on a Rule 12(b)(6)
2693 or Rule 12(c) motion.

2694 The Advisory Committee has put considerable energy into pleading rules in recent decades.
2695 After the Supreme Court ruled in Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics and Coordination Unit, 2696 507 U.S. 163 (1993), that Rule 9(b) requirement of particularity could not be imposed outside the 2697 fraud context (expressio unius est exclusio alterius, as Chief Justice Rehnquist said), but suggested 2698 that a rule amendment could expand the particularity requirement, the Committee spent 2699 considerable time during the 1990s considering whether such an amendment should be seriously 2700 considered.

2701 Then, after the Court’s decisions in Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544 (2007), 2702 and Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662 (2009), much energy was spent on whether an amendment to 2703 the rules would be helpful. Many argued that the “Twiqbal” decisions in effect expanded 2704 particularized pleading requirements like those embedded in Rule 9(b) beyond the fraud context.

2705 Much effort was expended on these possibilities, including the preparation by the current Rules
2706 Law Clerk of a 700-page memorandum detailing the actual experience of the lower courts in 2707 applying these two Supreme Court decisions. Eventually it was decided not to pursue amendments.

2708 This submission does not directly address these past episodes of possible pleading 2709 amendments, and it does not specifically raise questions about whether claims are sufficient to 2710 survive a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim.

2711 Nonetheless, if this is a new pleading requirement (as proposed), one must ask how that 2712 requirement is to be enforced. Can a party move to strike another party’s pleading for failure to 2713 have a DoDoC? Can a party unsatisfied with a part’s DoDoC move for a more definite statement
2714 of the DoDoC? Must a DoDoC be amended every time there is change the claims or party
2715 structure? Does that mean the plaintiff must file a new pleading because a defendant has filed a
2716 counterclaim adding parties under Rule 20 (see Rule 13(h)) or has asserted a third-party claim
2717 under Rule 14? How would this requirement apply in mass tort MDL proceedings? If it is true that 2718 parties will refine/revise their DoDoCs to reflect changes in the case as it moves forward, should 2719 permission to amend under Rule 15(a) be required? If so, should the court be more exacting in 2720 permitting such amendment after the cutoff point for amending pleadings under Rule 16(b)(3)(A)?

2721 There are surely other questions that would arise were this proposal to be pursued as a rule
2722 amendment. As the submission points out, judges and lawyers have in appropriate cases begun
2723 making diagrams of this sort to assist them in keeping track of sprawling cases. Under Rule 16, a 2724 court could as a matter of case management direct the parties to devise such a chart. But trying to 2725 define what exactly satisfies this new requirement, and what triggers the requirement (unless it 2726 applies to one-on-one cases with only one claim), could raise serious doubts about whether the 2727 game is worth the candle.

2728 It is recommended that this submission be removed from the agenda.

RULES SUGGESTION
to the
ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON CIVIL RULES

I am writing to respectfully suggest the addition of a new requirement for pleadings called a Document of Direction of Claims (or DoDoC) which has the purpose to create a visual method of showing claims against different parties in a suit that contains multiple plaintiffs or defendants. In today's complex Civil landscape there is a need to make things easier for all parties and the court and creating a visual attachment to pleadings will help secure a speedy determination. With modern technology the creation of the DoDoC will not be an expensive burden to plaintiffs or defendants in the creation of their filings. Lastly, during the process as the case moves through the system, documents like this are already being made internally by judges and clerks and this brings them out of the shadows.

To describe what a DoDoC is, an example will be the best start. In court case 3:19-cv-02854-JRK in the Northern District of Ohio was a case that got so complex in their claims that the unwinding of it through various motions took significant effort<sup>1</sup>. Attachment A would be an example of a DoDoC that would have been submitted with Document 161 showing the status of all claims of the suit. I started with Document 161 and worked backwards to get a current DoDoC, and it took approximately three hours of research. If each party was amending their DoDoC with the status as the suit progressed it would not have taken as many hours in total as each new DoDoC can build off the previous ones. By putting this visually it helps unwind the web that is caused in the current complex legal environment.

The FRCP is meant to provide speedy and inexpensive determinations and this kind of document will help all courts with increasing their speed while not creating an expensive cost in either time or money. For speed, these documents are meant to help provide clarity to all parties and the court. Judges are already creating these kinds of diagrams internally and this shifts that burden to the parties, the true keeper of their claims. This burden should not be expensive either. If the committee even starts to consider this proposal a legal tech company could produce a website to generate this diagram rather quickly. Also, I can foresee the open-source community building one as I am a part of that community and have seen their work firsthand. After spending about five hours, I created the start of a software that would allow lawyers and clerks to do this easily. You can see the output and test it yourself with the link to the website on attachment B. The DoDoC would help the court, would not be expensive to create, and aligns perfectly with the rules of the FRCP.

My suggestion is that Rule 10 to be amended to create the requirement of this document. The description of the diagram should be neutral and describe the function and not the form. It should describe what information should be in the diagram but not things like color, fonts, or other descriptive styles. It could be as simple as "[t]he Diagram shall visually indicate all parties and the number and types of claims between each." The rule should limit when the diagram would be included in the pleading, my thought is any time there is either multiple Plaintiffs or multiple Defendants. Other requirements could be the total number of claims or the total number of unique party interactions for claims.

Thank you for your consideration of this rule and document that I believe would bring a positive impact to the legal world and show that our profession can evolve with technological tools to help speed up processing of claims.

2729 22. Contempt – 23-CV-K

2730 Joshua Carback has submitted a proposal to adopt a new Civil Rule 42, and also to adopt
2731 new Appellate, Bankruptcy, Criminal, and Evidence rules. He submits also his recent article
2732 Contempt Power and the United States Courts, 44 Mitchell Hamline L.J. of Public Policy &
2733 Practice 105 (2023).

2734 In his cover letter, Mr. Carback explains: “My proposal recommends, among other things,
2735 the creation of a civil analogue to Criminal Rule 42, the revision of Criminal Rule 42, the revision
2736 of 18 U.S.C. § 401, to accomplish the following objectives:

- 2737 1. Define and distinguish criminal contempt and civil contempt;
- 2738 2. Explain the scope of criminal contempt and civil contempt;
- 2739 3. Create a formal process for parties to petition for contempt proceedings; and
- 2740 4. Clarify the range of penalties and purge conditions for contempt proceedings.

2741 He also says that “[t]he current morass of intertwined contempt statutes, regulations, and 2742 rules frustrates the ability of bench and bar alike to fulfill the values expressed in the Strategic Plan
2743 for the Federal Judiciary and Civil Rule 1.”

2744 Without noting that there is already a Civil Rule 42 (Consolidation, Separate Trials), Mr.
2745 Carback proposes the following (seemingly expecting that this rule will be a new Rule 42 and that 2746 all the rules with higher numbers would be renumbered, including some prominent ones like Rule
2747 50, Rule 56, Rule 68, and Rule 72. This problem could be solved by redesignating such a new rule 2748 as 41.1 or something like that.):

2749 New Fed. R. Civ. P. 42: Civil Contempt

2750 (a) Definition.

2751 (1) Civil contempt is disobedience out of the court’s presence, such as

2752 (i) A violation of a court order or decree;

2753 (ii) A violation of a local rule or chambers policy promulgated under 2754 Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 83; and

2755 (iii) A violation of a statute constituting contempt per se.

2756 (2) Civil contempt is coercive, not punitive.

2757 (3) A purge condition is a condition that must be satisfied in order to avoid or 2758 lift a coercive measure imposed by the court to compel compliance with an order 2759 or decree.

2760 (b) Authority.

2761 (1) Courts that possess inherent, constitutional, or statutory authority to 2762 adjudicate civil contempt proceedings are governed by this rule.

2763 (2) Masters can recommend civil contempt sanctions and certify them for 2764 disposition by a court with the proper authority to adjudicate the matter under 2765 Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54 [former Rule 53].

2766 (3) Other persons or tribunals who do not possess inherent, constitutional, or 2767 statutory authority to adjudicate civil contempt proceedings, but are authorized to 2768 recommend them, may certify those recommendations for disposition under this 2769 rule.

2770 (c) Procedure

2771 (1) Civil contempt proceedings must be included in the same action where the 2772 alleged contempt occurred unless the matter is certified from a person or a tribunal
2773 that lacks authority to conduct the proceeding.

2774 (2) The court may initiate a civil contempt proceeding sua sponte.

2775 (3) A party to an action can request a civil contempt proceeding by filing a 2776 petition with the court against the alleged contemnor.

2777 (4) An order issued sua sponte under (c)(2) or in response to a petition under 2778 (c)(3) must schedule a prehearing conference, a hearing, or both. Additionally, it 2779 must

2780 (i) recite a short and plain basis for the civil contempt proceeding under 2781 (c)(2) or (c)(3);

2782 (ii) schedule deadline for the filing of an answer by the alleged contemnor;

2783 (iii) state the time and place of any prehearing conference or hearing; and

2784 (iv) state the purge conditions requested, if any, under (c)(2) or 2785 contemplated by the court under (b)(3), including, fine and any period of 2786 incarceration.

2787 (5) After a prehearing conference or hearing is concluded, the court must 2788 determine if the following elements are established by clear and convincing 2789 evidence:

2790 (i) A valid order or decree of the court was in effect;

2791 (ii) The alleged contemnor knew of that order or decree; and 2792 (iii) The alleged contemnor breached that order or decree.

2793 (6) If the court determines that the alleged contemnor was guilty of civil 2794 contempt, the court must issue an order that

2795 (i) provides a short and concise explanation of its disposition;

2796 (ii) lists the purge conditions imposed to enforce compliance with the 2797 breached order or decree; and

2798 (iii) states the precise manner in which the purge conditions must be 2799 satisfied.

2800 (7) If the court issues an order finding an alleged contemnor guilty of civil 2801 contempt and imposes incarceration as a purge condition, that order can be served
2802 and enforced in any district. All other orders issued in a civil contempt proceeding 2803 may be served only in the state where the issuing court is located or elsewhere in 2804 the United States within 100 miles from where the order was issued.

2805 (d) Purge Conditions. Purge conditions for civil contempt must involve the least 2806 possible power adequate to the end proposed and must be possible to perform. Purge 2807 conditions may be imposed individually or in combination. Purge conditions may be 2808 imposed immediately upon a finding of civil contempt or contingently in the event that a 2809 contemnor does not comply with an order or decree of court by a specified deadline. The 2810 following is an inexhaustive list of purge conditions:

2811 (1) Reprimand;

2812 (2) Report to any state bar or equivalent professional body; and

2813 (3) Fine;

2814 (i) A fine may be payable to the court, a party prejudiced by the contempt 2815 as compensation, or some other recipient for the purpose of promoting 2816 compliance.

2817 (ii) A fine must be calculated according to the character and magnitude of 2818 the harm or prejudice threatened by continued breach of the court's order or 2819 decree.

2820 (e) Incarceration. The court may impose a period of incarceration on the contemnor
2821 immediately until they comply with the breached order or decree or contingently if another 2822 purge condition is not timely satisfied.

2823 (f) Criminal Contempt. Nothing in this rule can be construed to detract from the court's 2824 authority to levy sanctions under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 11, contempt under 2825 Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 42, or any other relevant authorities as an alternative 2826 or in addition to civil contempt under this rule.

2827 * * * * *

2828           There can be little doubt that the courts have puzzled over some features of their contempt
2829 power. For one thing, the right to jury trial may depend on whether a proceeding seeks “civil” or 2830 “criminal” contempt. In United States v. United Mine Workers, 330 U.S. 258, 364 (1947), Justice
2831 Rutledge’s dissent described contempt as “a civil-criminal hodgepodge.” For a thorough 50-year-
2832 old report, see Dan Dobbs, Contempt of Court, A Survey, 56 Cornell L.Q. 183 (1971).

2833           It is undeniable that there are some puzzling aspects of the contempt power. A famous 2834 example is Walker v. City of Birmingham, 388 U.S. 307 (1967), holding that the “collateral bar 2835 rule” prevented defendants (including Martin Luther King, Jr.) charged with contempt for holding 2836 a civil rights march on Easter Sunday even though a state court had enjoined it could not defend 2837 their contempt prosecution by contending that the Birmingham parade permit ordinance was 2838 unconstitutional. (King was incarcerated and wrote Letter From the Birmingham Jail while in that 2839 jail.) In Shuttlesworth v. City of Birmingham, 394 U.S. 147 (1969) the court held that the 2840 Birmingham parade permit ordinance King was incarcerated for violating itself violated the First 2841 Amendment and was invalid.

2842           Clearly these are important issues. And clearly Mr. Carback has invested an incredible
2843 amount of energy into research on both the history of contempt and the history of rulemaking
2844 relevant to contempt. See, e.g., his footnotes 18, 19, 20, 24, and 25 in his article, which is included
2845 in this agenda book. It even quotes from notes of subcommittee conference calls about the Rule 2846 45 project more than a decade ago.

2847           Despite the murky parameters of the contempt power, there has been no effort until this 2848 one to engage in rulemaking to address these questions. Specific references to contempt do appear 2849 in the rules (e.g., Rule 37(b)(2)(vii) regarding failure to comply with a court order to provide 2850 discovery – “treating as contempt of court the failure to obey any order except an order to submit 2851 to a physical or mental examination.”).

2852           As a consequence, particularly given the broad array of situations in which a court may use
2853 its contempt power, it seems best to remove this proposal from this committee’s agenda. If another
2854 committee (the proposal is directed to all five rules committees) chooses to pursue the contempt 2855 proposals, that might be reason to take another look.

2856           If the Committee decides to proceed, the submitted draft raises myriad questions. For 2857 example, it refers not only to local rules under Rule 83, but also a “chambers policy.” What is that?

2858           It also says that courts with “inherent” authority to entertain contempt proceedings are 2859 governed by this rule. The question what constitutes an “inherent” power is limited by this rule.
2860 (On that note, there has been a history of getting away from the idea of “common law crimes,” 2861 which seem to suffer from ex post facto features that raise due process issues.)

2862           It says that masters may recommend a contempt sanction to a judge with authority to 2863 impose one, but Rule 53(c)(2) already says that.

2864           It says the contempt proceedings “must be included in the same action.” It is not entirely 2865 clear what that means.

2866           It requires a “prehearing conference” or a hearing in all cases. Requiring a prehearing 2867 conference might interfere with the court’s ability to enforce its orders in a timely fashion. And 2868 phrasing this in the alternative suggests that holding a prehearing conference could be a substitute
2869 for holding a hearing.

2870           It adopts a “clear and convincing evidence” standard, which may be wise, but might in 2871 some circumstances unduly hamper the court in enforcing its orders.

2872           It says that orders must be served only in the state where the court sits or within 100 miles
2873 of the courthouse. So if the contemnor absconds to the opposite coast the only sanction the court 2874 can impose is imprisonment? That seems odd.

2875           It offers an “inexhaustive list” of purge conditions, but then states conditions for imposing 2876 a fine that make it appear that a fine may be imposed only on those grounds.

2877           Not doubt many more issues would arise if this proposal were taken up, but it is not 2878 apparent that there is a need to do so. It is suggested that this matter be removed from the agenda 2879 unless another rules committee is proceeding to look at it.

Dear Secretary Byron,

I write to you to formally submit my proposal for reforming judicial rules governing contempt proceedings. The inherent power of the judiciary to initiate contempt proceedings is well established. The culmination of decades of rulemaking under the interbranch framework instituted by the Rules Enabling Act of 1934, unfortunately, transformed what was once a relatively simple exercise of discretion into a more onerous and complicated task than it needs to be. Federal contempt law, by my count, now consists of at least 178 opinions issued by the United States Supreme Court, 182 statutes in the United States Code, 95 regulations in the Code of Federal Regulations, 37 nationwide rules of federal practice and procedure, 10 circuit wide rules governing policy and procedure, and 151 local rules governing practice and procedure.

I attach to this letter a published law review article expressing my proposal for reforming federal contempt law, including my proposed revisions to federal statutes, rules, and regulations. I also attach a supplement containing proposed revisions that I updated since that article was published. My proposal is comprehensive and systematic. My proposed rule revisions, in particular, affect appellate procedure, bankruptcy procedure, civil procedure, criminal procedure, and evidence. I therefore request that you transmit my proposal to the Standing Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure and its five advisory committees for their mutual consideration. My proposal recommends, among other things, the creation of a civil analogue to Criminal Rule 42; the revision of Criminal Rule 42; the revision of 18 U.S.C. §§ 401, 3484, and 3499; and the repeal of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1703, 1503, 1509, 1512–13, 1621–23, 3146–49. This proposal will thereby fulfill the following objectives:

1. Define and distinguish criminal contempt and civil contempt;
2. Explain the scope of criminal contempt and civil contempt;
3. Create a formal process for parties to petition for contempt proceedings;
4. Clarify the range of penalties and purge conditions for contempt proceedings;
5. Shift discretion for contempt prosecutions from the executive to the judiciary; and
6. Authorize bankruptcy courts to wield contempt power.

I believe that the adoption of my proposal will promote the clarity, simplicity, efficiency, and fairness of contempt proceedings.

Respectfully,

Joshua T. Carback, Esq.

  - (3) Direct criminal contempt is misbehavior in the court's presence or so near to it as to obstruct the administration of justice.
  - (4) Constructive criminal contempt is disobedience to the court outside of the court's presence, and can involve the following:
    - (i) violation of a court order or decree;
    - (ii) interference with or obstruction of the administration of justice, including improper threats, tampering, or other undue influences directed toward grand jurors, petit jurors, witnesses, officers of the court, and other persons operating under court order or decree;
    - (iii) violation of bail or parole conditions;
    - (iv) material misrepresentation to the court, including perjury;
    - (v) violation of a local rule or chambers policy promulgated under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 83; and
    - (vi) violation of a statute constituting contempt per se.
- (b) Authority.

- (1) Courts that possess inherent, constitutional, or statutory authority to adjudicate civil contempt proceedings are governed by this rule.
- (2) Masters can recommend criminal contempt sanctions and certify them for disposition by a court with proper authority to adjudicate the matter under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54 [former Rule 53].

(c) Direct Criminal Contempt Procedure

- (1) Misbehavior committed in the court's presence can be adjudicated through summary proceedings if the presiding judge certifies that he saw or heard the misbehavior.
- (2) Direct criminal contempts are sui generis and therefore have no elements, mens rea, or standard of proof.

- (4) The court cannot enter a summary contempt judgment relating to misbehavior in its presence nunc pro tunc.
- (5) A presiding judge who can lawfully preside over a summary proceeding for direct criminal contempt can nevertheless refer the matter for a constructive criminal contempt proceeding under section (d) of this rule if doing so is in the interest of justice.

(d) Constructive Criminal Contempt Procedure

- (1) Constructive criminal contempts must be adjudicated through a separate proceeding with a separate caption from the action in which the contempt arose.
- (2) The court may initiate a constructive criminal contempt proceeding sua sponte or by petition.
- (3) The court must give the alleged contemnor notice in open court and issue a show cause order or an arrest order. The alleged contemnor must be released or detained as Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 47 [former Rule 46] provides. The alleged contemnor is entitled to a trial by jury. The show cause order or arrest order must
  - (i) Recite a short and plain basis for the criminal contempt proceeding, including the essential facts constituting the criminal contempt charged;

    - (i) There was a lawful and reasonably specific order, decree, or proceeding;
    - (ii) The alleged contemnor violated that order or decree, or misbehaved in the court's presence; and
    - (iii) The alleged contemnor's conduct was willful.
  - (6) If the alleged criminal contempt involved disrespect or criticism towards a judge, that judge is disqualified from presiding over the trial or hearing unless the alleged contemnor consents.
  - (7) Upon a finding or verdict of guilty, the court may impose punishment.
- (e) Punishment. Punishment for criminal contempt must involve the least possible power adequate to the end proposed. Penalties for direct and constructive criminal contempt can be imposed individually or in combination. The following is an inexhaustive list of potential penalties:
- (1) Reprimand
  - (2) Fine
    - (i) The fine can be imposed on a per diem basis or consist of a single sum.
    - (ii) The fine may be payable to the court, to a party prejudiced by the contempt as compensation, or some other recipient for the purpose of atoning for any disrespect or indignity.
    - (iii) The fine must be calculated according to the character and magnitude of any disrespect or indignity.
  - (3) Incarceration
    - (i) Direct Criminal Contempt. If the alleged contemnor is found guilty of direct criminal contempt, he can be sentenced to a period of incarceration not exceeding six months for a single contemptuous act. He may, however, be sentenced to a period of incarceration exceeding six months for more than one contemptuous act, provided that the increment of incarceration attributed to each act does not exceed six months.

- (ii) Constructive Criminal Contempt. If the alleged contemnor is found guilty of constructive criminal contempt, he can be sentenced to a period of incarceration exceeding six months.
- (f) Civil Contempt. Nothing in this rule can be construed to detract from the court’s authority to correct defiance of its orders or decrees through civil contempt proceedings under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 42 and any other relevant authorities.

I. INTRODUCTION

Federal law governing the contempt power of the United States Courts is disorganized, cluttered, and poorly drafted. The lack of consolidation within and between various sources of federal legal authority is a critical problem. Contempt provisions lie scattered in piecemeal form across the entire breadth of the United States Code. Contempt provisions comprising federal common law likewise lie scattered across five separate sets of judicial rules of practice and procedure, covering five separate subject areas, using five separate numerologies: these rules govern bankruptcy procedure, appellate procedure, civil procedure, criminal procedure, and evidence. The high volume and lack of coordination between these interrelated authorities needlessly complicate contempt litigation. The objectives of this article are therefore to comprehensively survey the authorities governing contempt power and rectify their defects.

A. Overview of Contempt Law

The power to punish disrespect and disobedience through contempt proceedings is inherent to the judicial power and implied under Article III of the United States Constitution. There are two important distinctions mediating this power. The first distinction is between criminal contempt and civil contempt. Criminal contempt is contempt of a court's dignity. Civil contempt is disobedience of a court's order, rule, or judgment. Criminal contempt and civil contempt are not mutually exclusive categories; they often overlap. An act of disobedience can insult a court's dignity; an insult against a court's dignity can arise from an act of disobedience.<sup>1</sup>

The second distinction is between direct contempt and constructive contempt. Direct contempt occurs within a court's presence, that is, within the proximity of the presiding tribunal. Constructive contempt occurs beyond the proximity of the courthouse. All direct contempt is criminal. Constructive contempt can be criminal, civil, or both.<sup>2</sup>

B. Defects in Contempt Law

The Strategic Plan for the Federal Judiciary declares seven core values: rule of law, equal justice, judicial independence, diversity and respect, accountability, excellence, and service.<sup>3</sup> Federal contempt law does not reflect these values. The scope of the contempt power of the United States Courts is not clearly expressed in federal contempt authorities for four reasons. First, there is no statute that comprehensively governs civil contempt.

Second, the principal statute governing criminal contempt, 18 U.S.C. § 401, is defective. It does not adequately declare, for example, the distinction between civil and criminal contempt procedures or what penalties are liable upon conviction for criminal contempt.

Third, there is a lack of clarity about whether bankruptcy judges possess contempt power.

Fourth, judicial rules governing contempt procedures are poorly organized. There are multiple sets of contempt rules governing different courts with different jurisdictions. There is a lack of coordination between contempt provisions within these sets of rules. There is also a lack of coordination between these different sets of rules. These defects undermine the uniformity, simplicity, and efficiency of federal practice and procedure as a whole.<sup>4</sup>

C. Reforming Contempt Law

I propose to systematically improve federal contempt law in three ways. First, I propose to improve the statutory regime for contempt procedures by eliminating redundancy between criminal contempt statutes and passing legislation that explicitly gives bankruptcy courts contempt power.

Second, I propose new rules and rule amendments to streamline contempt procedures for the United States Supreme Court, United States Courts of Appeals, United States District Courts, specialty courts, territorial courts, and administrative courts.

Third, I propose to nationalize local contempt rules derived from specific courts with local contempt provisions that deserve to be replicated. Simplification of contempt provisions at one level of authority generates a cascade of improvements by eliminating the need for similar provisions at others. An improved nationwide rule can eliminate the need for needlessly complicating local derivations. If a nationwide rule says more, moreover, a statute should say less. Improvements to nationwide rules of practice and procedure, in other words, eliminate superfluous and needlessly complicating local derivations and statutory counterparts.

D. Roadmap for this Article

Part II of this article explains the interbranch process for generating federal judicial rules of practice and procedure. It recounts how the federal government created contempt provisions at the inception of the interbranch rulemaking process in order to provide historical perspective. It also explains in more detail how the four defects I identified in contemporary federal contempt law undermine the efficacy of contempt procedures in federal courts.<sup>5</sup> Part III of this article provides precise instructions for implementing my three overarching proposals for reforming federal contempt law.<sup>6</sup> Part IV concludes.<sup>7</sup> Parts V – IX are appendices containing strikethrough copies of authorities currently comprising federal contempt law along with my proposed reforms and revisions. Parts IX – XV are appendices containing clean copies of authorities comprising federal contempt law in its current form. The appendices in Parts V – XV serve both as specific references for my proposals in this article as well as general references for practitioners and judges engaged in contempt proceedings. I encourage the reader to turn back and forth

II. BACKGROUND

The Rules Enabling Act of 1934 created the modern interbranch framework for making rules of practice and procedure for the federal judiciary, including rules governing contempt proceedings. It was a landmark achievement in the annals of American institutional reform. But successive generations of incremental tinkering slowly spun a doctrinal web so intricate and dense that the authorities governing federal contempt law practically shun attorneys from seriously considering contempt power as an effective recourse for problems that arise in litigation. The needless complexity of the federal contempt law chills judges from understanding and applying contempt power on behalf of the courts as well.<sup>9</sup>

A. Judicial Rulemaking Generally

The Rules Enabling Act of 1934, now codified in Title 28, Chapter 31 of the United States Code, balances the competing interests and equities of each branch of the federal government in judicial rules of procedure by requiring cooperation, collaboration, and contribution from each branch in the judicial rulemaking process. Section 2071 specifically provides that rules promulgated by the Supreme Court “shall be consistent with Acts of Congress and rules of practice and procedure prescribed under section 2072 of this title.”<sup>10</sup> The ball for judicial rulemaking therefore starts in the judiciary’s court, pun intended.<sup>11</sup> The Supreme Court, however, no longer bears the weight of that responsibility alone—the Supreme Court delegates its rulemaking responsibility through several layers of the federal judiciary’s administrative hierarchy.

The United States Judicial Conference administers the federal judiciary at the national level by supervising the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, facilitating internal disciplinary actions, developing national policies, proposing federal legislation, and improving federal practice and procedure.<sup>12</sup> The Judicial Conference delegates its rulemaking responsibility to its Standing Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure.<sup>13</sup>

The Standing Committee reviews and coordinates the rulemaking recommendations of five advisory committees, each dedicated to a different subject area: appellate procedure, bankruptcy procedure, civil procedure, criminal procedure, and evidence. The meetings of the advisory committees are open and recorded. Each advisory committee has sub-committees dedicated to different projects within their respective domains. The roster of each committee consists of a chair, several members, a reporter, a secretary, and independent “contributors”—subject matter experts such as practicing attorneys, law professors, and representatives from the United States Department of Justice.<sup>14</sup>

Proposals to reform federal rules of practice and procedure must survive a daunting seven-stage gauntlet of interbranch scrutiny. First, the advisory committees to the Standing Committee make recommended rule amendments predicated on study, discussions, and consultations with their respective subcommittees.

Second, upon the approval of the Standing Committee, the advisory committees publish proposed rule amendments and solicit public comment.

Third, at the conclusion of the public comment period, the advisory committees review public feedback and, if worthy, submit proposed rule amendments incorporating public comment to the Standing Committee.

Fourth, the Standing Committee reviews proposed rule amendments by the advisory committees, typically at its June meeting, and, if deemed worthy, submits those proposed rule amendments to the Judicial Conference.

Fifth, the Judicial Conference reviews proposed rule amendments, typically at its September meeting, and, if worthy, submits those proposed rule amendments to the Supreme Court.<sup>15</sup>

Sixth, the Supreme Court reviews proposed rule amendments and, if worthy, transmits them to the United States Congress for review on May 1.<sup>16</sup>

Seventh, there is a congressional review period of seven months. During that period Congress may act on proposed rule amendments and reject, modify, or defer them. Unless Congress acts, proposed rule amendments become legally effective by on December 1.<sup>17</sup>

B. Judicial Rulemaking and Contempt Rules

Congress intended for judicial rules to govern contempt proceedings from the beginning.<sup>18</sup> The Standing Committee and its constituent advisory committees therefore spent a significant amount of time deliberating how to make contempt rules efficient and clear. The advisory committees identified several common issues in the course of their deliberations: the extent to which the civil contempt and criminal contempt provisions should mirror each other; the distinction between constructive contempt and direct contempt; the distinction between civil contempt and criminal contempt; the scope of what constitutes “the court’s presence” for the purposes of delimiting the boundaries of direct criminal contempt; whether conduct can be subject to both criminal contempt and civil contempt simultaneously; and whether corporations can be held in contempt.<sup>19</sup>

The advisory committees resolved these issues over time as follows. Contumacious conduct can be subject to both civil and criminal contempt proceedings simultaneously. Artificial persons, corporations, are liable for contempt like natural persons. The scope of conduct constituting direct criminal contempt subject to summary judgment includes conduct not only occurring in the courtroom during a proceeding, but also conduct in the judge's chambers, the clerk's office, other areas of a courthouse, and the courthouse's immediate surround. A court's "presence," for the purpose of contempt law, is not limited to the actual room where a presiding judge sits.<sup>20</sup>

Congress continued to tinker with contempt procedures but lacks a sufficiently comprehensive vision necessary to achieve true

progress.<sup>21</sup> The federal judiciary’s advisory committees likewise strived to make contempt rules compatible with contempt statutes for years. But the fit was never flush. Although the legislature and judiciary worked to establish the groundwork for the federal contempt law, they failed to operationalize general principles through a system of interlocking statutes and rules that is sufficiently concise, compact, and clear.

The history of how the federal judiciary’s advisory committees grappled with drafting contempt rules revealed two maladies afflicting the current regime governing contempt law: first, the selective articulation of contempt liability in the federal rules of practice, and procedure; and second, the dizzying array of external and internal cross-references between different contempt authorities.

1. Articulation of Contempt Liability.

A difficult question presented from the very beginning was how often to punctuate the conclusion of a rule with the fact that non-compliance is liable for contempt. Should every rule have a contempt clause? In discussing Criminal Rule 4 (summons) in 1941, for example, the criminal rules advisory committee pondered whether it should state that noncompliance may result in contempt proceedings. On one hand, they could insert a contempt clause for every rule to ensure clarity. On the other hand, they could leave a contempt clause out of every rule on the theory that contempt is an implicit sanction for all disobedience or disrespect; therefore, mentioning it in provision after provision would be overly redundant and needlessly take up space.

An excerpt from the committee’s discussion in 1941 illustrates how the rule makers serving in the Judicial Conference in different capacities pondered this conundrum:

<sup>21</sup> Act of June 25, 1948, ch. 645, 62 Stat. 701 (codified as amended at 18 U.S.C. § 3285, §§ 3691–3692); Act of May 24, 1949, ch. 139, § 8(c), 63 Stat. 89, 90; Court Improvements Act of 1982, Pub. L. No. 97-164, 96 Stat. 25 (codified as amended at 28 U.S.C. § 2077); Judicial Improvements and Access to Justice Act of 1988, Pub. L. No. 100-702, 102 Stat. 4642 (codified as amended at 28 U.S.C. § 2072).

Murray Seasongood: Will people say, “Well, after all, the only penalty is for contempt, and I won’t pay any attention to it.”

Alexander Holtzoff: Then he will issue a warrant if the defendant does not appear.

Murray Seasongood: Could anybody say that is a limitation, that the only penalty is the penalty for contempt of court for not obeying a summons?

James J. Robinson: I tried to save space, possibly at some cost.

Murray Seasongood: If he does not appear in response to the summons, then a warrant shall be issued. Perhaps that should be in.

George H. Dession: That could be done in any case. That does not have to go in.

Frederick E. Crane: I do not know, but any court process, if it is disobeyed, is subject to contempt. Do you have to add that to every order or process of the court? I did not think that you needed to emphasize it. I may be wrong, but I took for granted that any order or process, whether a summons or warrant or any order, civil or criminal, is subject to contempt.

Chairman Arthur T. Vanderbilt: That is true. This is the language so that the man who receives it will be apprised of that fact.

Frederick E. Crane: That may be the answer, then.<sup>22</sup>

The less rigid approach prevailed over time. As criminal rules advisory committee member George Medalie noted in 1943, “There are some things we had better leave to the courts, to their experience and practical judgment. You cannot cover everything.”<sup>23</sup>

The advisory committees did not incorporate contempt power into federal rules in a coordinated, systematic matter. Instead, they opted to gradually reform rules implicating contempt power on a case-by-case basis. They employed four different approaches to amendments to contempt rules over time.

First, there were cases when the advisory committees intentionally added contempt provisions to rules because they were certain that contempt power was available, and that availability was worthy of emphasis.<sup>24</sup>

(apprehension);<sup>25</sup> or by affirmatively disclaiming that contempt was unavailable, such as in Criminal Rule 4 (summons).<sup>26</sup>

Third, there were cases when advisory committees were divided or agnostic on the availability of contempt as an enforcement mechanism for a particular rule. The criminal advisory committee, for example, deliberated the scope of contempt liability for unauthorized release of grand jury materials under Criminal Rule 6(e) in 1999. It ultimately decided to defer the resolution of that issue to judicial interpretation (case law) or congressional action. This anecdote illustrates the troublesome fact that while the Standing Committee was generally zealous to conserve its rulemaking prerogatives, its constituent organs, like any bureaucratic entity, tended to “punt the football” on difficult questions.<sup>27</sup> This anecdote also reveals the tradeoff for delegating rulemaking responsibility across multiple levels of review involving a larger group of people. When power is diffuse, the reins are loose.

Fourth, there were cases when the advisory committees were certain that contempt power was available as an enforcement mechanism but decided not to insert an explicit textual affirmation of that fact. Given that contempt power is inherent to the judicial power, the advisory committees often wanted to avoid emphasizing the availability of contempt as an enforcement mechanism when they believed it was clearly implied. They left out any explicit reference to contempt power in some rules, in other words, not because they were agnostic or even had negative views about the availability of contempt proceedings, but rather because they thought it was more economical to keep silent or because the availability of contempt power was deemed unworthy of emphasis. The banality of contempt liability for disrespect or disobedience therefore bears some blame for why federal rules of practice and procedure are so inconsistent in explaining if and to what extent contempt power applies to any given situation.<sup>28</sup>

The history of advisory committee deliberations about how to incorporate contempt power into the federal rules of practice and procedure reveals an institutional tendency to prefer flexibility over systemization. It is a general principle of law that anyone who disobeys the authority or denies the dignity of an Article III court is liable for contempt whether or not a particular rule explicitly says so. The particular rules where the Standing Committee intentionally omitted any reference to contempt power or affirmatively prohibited the applicability of contempt power consequently were quite few. When the Standing Committee explicitly disclaimed contempt liability in particular rules, it was for emphasis, not as a matter of course. The fact that the Standing Committee did treat silence as a prohibition on a few occasions, however, created some uncertainty in the rules: silence did not always mean the same thing. The negative implication canon does not apply consistently across the board. Sometimes silence meant “Yes.” Sometimes silence meant “No.”<sup>29</sup>

The history of contempt power yields an interesting paradox: the advisory committees were intentional in creating, yet they were not always clear about what their intentions created. They recognized from the beginning that there was a cost to taking a flexible approach by sprinkling textual references to contempt power here and there, rather than systematically confirming in every rule whether contempt power was available or not. In the end, that decision cost them in terms of clarity and consistency.

The use of four different approaches rather than one created confusion. The tradeoff of having three levels of rules committees—the Standing Committee, advisory committees, and advisory subcommittees—was injecting more expertise into the rules at the cost of creating more “noise” between the rules. There are therefore now too many cooks in the kitchen. For the justice system to become more efficient, systematization, not flexibility, must be the prime directive. Federal rulemaking requires a new paradigm: fewer hands, and more delicate fingers.

2. External & Internal Cross-References.

The Rules Enabling Act did not fully dredge the swamp of disparate authorities that stymied litigators during the nineteenth century. It simply provided enough drainage to allow for a more level playing field. But cross-references between judicial rules and statutes operationalizing federal procedures still needlessly complicated the game. Not every judicial rule has a statutory cross-reference, of course, but many do. Advisory committees recognized early on that zigzagging between disparate authorities to figure out how a particular contempt procedure works is not ideal.<sup>30</sup>

There are two types of cross-references in contempt law. The first type of cross-references are external cross-references: procedural rules that cross-reference procedural statutes. The Standing Committee took the view that it should keep authority for enforcement procedures, like contempt power, exclusively within the rules whenever possible. In 1953, the civil rules advisory committee noted that its draftsmanship of Civil Rule 45(e) was so good, it rendered its coordinate statute unnecessary, therefore, Congress abolished that statute outright.<sup>31</sup> In 1973, the criminal rules advisory committee voted to keep the punishment for unauthorized release of grand jury testimony set forth in Criminal Rule 6 (grand jury) strictly within the scope of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, rather <sup>30</sup> 28 U.S.C. § 1652; cf. U.S. Jud. Conf. Advisory Comm. on Rules of Civ. Proc., Meeting Minutes, U.S. S. Ct. 27 (Apr. 20–21, 2009) (“It is clear that Rule 45 is a long and complicated rule. ‘You have to work hard to find what it means.’ Many judges say that it is a perfectly fine rule, that the problem is that lawyers do not understand it. A fine rule that lawyers cannot understand may deserve some clarification.”).

<sup>31</sup> U.S. Jud. Conf. Advisory Comm. on Rules Civ. Proc., Meeting Minutes, U.S. S. Ct. 442–43 (May 19, 1953) (statement of Hon. Charles Edward Clark, U.S. Ct. App. 2d Cir.) (“I just comment in passing that is one of the difficulties that occurred as to the poor admiralty people. [FED. R. CIV. P.] 45(e) is a very good rule of subpoena. It was so good that the revisers of Title 28 U.S. Code said it was lovely, and since it was so good[,] they didn’t need any statute. They abolished the statute, and then we had the question what to do in admiralty.”).

than requesting that Congress enact coordinate statutes in the United States Code to serve that purpose.<sup>32</sup>

We find a less stark example in 2000 when the criminal rules advisory committee considered inserting an external cross-reference to 28 U.S.C. § 1784. Section 1784 governs contempt proceedings against foreign residents who fail to respond to subpoenas. The committee minutes reveal that there was no consensus about whether the general rule governing criminal contempt—Criminal Rule 42 (then Criminal Rule 43)—even applied to Section 1784. The committee opted to omit a cross-reference. It was satisfied with only having a cross-reference to Section 1784 in Criminal Rule 1, which outlined the scope of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure as a whole.<sup>33</sup> In 2001, the criminal rules advisory committee accepted a subcommittee recommendation to amend Criminal Rule 42 (criminal contempt) to reflect the new authority of magistrate judges to preside over contempt proceedings. This amendment simply inserted a cross-reference to the relevant statute granting magistrate judges the contempt power.<sup>34</sup>

The second type of cross-references are cross-references between rules. One might wonder if it was ever possible to make each rule hermetically sealed and self-sufficient. The principle of autarky in, though academically interesting, never caught on. Not only did the advisory committees frequently draft rules within a given subject area that cross-referenced other subject areas—they occasionally even drafted internal cross-references between subject areas. Bankruptcy Rule 9.11, for example, was drafted in the likeness of Civil Rule 11.<sup>35</sup>

Over time, advisory committees made case-by-case decisions as to whether cross-references in the body of a rule or its comments were appropriate. Some rules ended up being more self-sufficient than others. The criminal rules advisory committee opted in 2000 to not include an internal cross-reference in Criminal Rule 42 (criminal contempt) to Criminal Rule 32 (sentencing) for the purpose of clarifying whether a criminal contempt sentencing would require the production of a presentence report (it did not).<sup>36</sup>

The criminal rules advisory committee agreed with a subcommittee proposal in 2001 to insert an internal cross-reference in Criminal Rule 7 (indictment and information) clarifying that contempt charges under Criminal Rule 42 (criminal contempt) need not be initiated by indictment.<sup>37</sup> Suffice it to say that both internal and external cross-references made contempt law more convoluted than necessary. Anyone who needs to prepare for a contempt proceeding practically needs to wear a neck brace to mitigate the amount of whiplash they will suffer from jerking back and forth between so many different interconnected contempt authorities.

III. ANALYSIS

The three branches of the federal government must work together to reform statutes, sentencing guidelines, and judicial rules governing the contempt power of the United States Courts. I provide specific recommendations for contempt reforms in the context of criminal, civil, bankruptcy, and administrative procedure below.

A. Criminal Contempt Legislation

I propose that the federal government amend 18 U.S.C. § 401 and Criminal Rule 42 to be more comprehensive in three ways. First, Congress should modify 18 U.S.C. § 401 to provide explicit notice of the three penalties or purge conditions that a court may prescribe for contempt: reprimand, fines, and imprisonment. The language for this amendment should be broad and permissive, not exhaustive. Courts should be allowed ample room for discretion and creativity in handling contempt matters.<sup>38</sup>

Second, Criminal Rule 42 should be amended to allow parties to file petitions out of court or move in court for civil and/or criminal contempt proceedings.<sup>39</sup>

Third, Criminal Rule 42 and 18 U.S.C. § 401 should also expressly declare the right of the court to initiate contempt proceedings sua sponte. These amendments will render criminal contempt statutes, especially statutes in the genre of obstruction of justice (perjury, witness tampering, violation of bail and probation orders, etc.) superfluous and justify their repeal.

One might argue that such a widespread effort to repeal criminal contempt statutes is unjustified. Criminal contempt statutes are normally merely declaratory of a court's right to punish an offense through its inherent power. But the purpose of the criminal contempt statutes at issue is not simply to express what the law is. By rendering an offense that is sui generis by default into a crime as such, the discretion for prosecution and punishment shifts from the judiciary to the executive. That is the real purpose behind the criminal contempt statutes that saturate the federal criminal code. The criminalization of contempt forms a chokehold on judicial discretion. It represents a fear that judges will not adequately punish contempt if left to their own devices.

I maintain that if there is anywhere where judicial discretion in punishment should have priority, it is in the zone of the judiciary's inherent power to punish contempt. When the judicial power guaranteed under Article III is the greatest "victim" of an offense, the judicial power should have the greatest prerogative in vindicating that offense. I believe that the judiciary is capable of using its broad sentencing discretion to adequately punish conduct contemplated by criminal contempt statutes. For hundreds of years, common law courts punished indignities against them under their inherent power, not as crimes as such, without any problems. I do not see any justification for departing from this tradition.<sup>40</sup> Criminal contempt statutes are, in my view, unnecessary.

In light of my proposed amendments to 18 U.S.C. § 401 and Criminal Rule 42, I propose that Congress repeal the following criminal statutes: 18 U.S.C. §§ 1073, 1503, 1509, 1512, 1523, 1621–1623, 3484, 3498–3499, and 3146–3149.<sup>41</sup> These repeals will require amendments to the current model federal jury instruction for contempt under Section 401 as well. The federal criminal code is obese. This is a good place to trim fat. One cannot complain that this pattern of repeal will amplify the threat of impunity. Those liabilities once contemplated by criminal contempt statutes will simply collapse into 18 U.S.C. § 401 and Criminal Rule 42.<sup>42</sup>

<sup>40</sup> E.g., King v. Bellingham (1649) 82 K.B. 582, Style 126 (Eng.) (punishing perjury with a fine of ten pounds); Wingfield's Case (1633) 79 K.B. 819, Cro. Car. 251 (Eng.) (punishing men who assaulted a sheriff of Middlesex with fines ranging between 500 marks and 500 pounds); Royson's Case (1629) 79 K.B. 729, Cro. Car. 146 (Eng.) (punishing breach of bail with imprisonment and standing in the pillory with a paper proclaiming the contemnor's offense).

The reversion of criminal contempt of court from a class of statutory crime as such back into a sui generis offense will resolve separation of powers concerns triggered under the Appointments Clause when the judiciary appoints independent prosecutors under Rule 42. The proper way to achieve both a balance and separation of power between the coordinate branches of the federal government is to reduce the burden of each branches' involvement in vindicating each other's prerogatives to the greatest extent possible. The means and ends of criminal contempt proceedings, for example, is to vindicate judicial power that is both inherent and implied under Article III. The executive power under Article II therefore ought to be involved to the minimum extent possible in enforcing and upholding the dignity of the judicial power under Article III through contempt proceedings. To that end, it is perhaps appropriate that the default prosecutor for criminal contempt charges should be an independent prosecutor rather than a public prosecutor.<sup>43</sup>

B. Bankruptcy Contempt Legislation

I propose new legislation to settle the question of whether bankruptcy judges possess contempt power. The passage of the Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act in 1984 did not clarify whether bankruptcy judges and magistrate judges had contempt power. The Federal Courts Improvement Act of 2000 clarified that magistrate judges do indeed possess contempt power, but the status of bankruptcy judges was left unresolved. I am not convinced that bankruptcy courts currently have contempt power. Such power cannot, in my mind, be granted to an Article I court sub silentio.<sup>44</sup> Since Congress gave contempt power to magistrate judges, I see no reason why bankruptcy judges should not possess it as well. But Congress must grant such power expressly, not by implication.<sup>45</sup>

C. Administrative State Legislation

I propose two sets of statutory reforms affecting administrative entities within the executive branch. First, I propose that Congress harmonize laws regulating referrals of contempt matters by administrative courts, boards, agency panels, etc., to federal district courts. The specific administrative entities implicated by this proposal include United States Departments of Agriculture, Commerce, Health and Human Services, Interior, Labor, Justice, Defense, Homeland Security, Treasury, Transportation, as well as some independent agencies. The particular administrative law courts implicated by this proposal include agency tribunals such as the National Labor Relations Board, the Harbor Workers' Compensation Benefits Review Board, immigration courts, the Trademark Trial and Appeal Board, and the Patent Trial and Appeal Board. I drafted a model statute to fulfill this proposed administrative reform for all of these administrative entities. The draft language states that the certification of contempt matters arising before administrative law courts, bodies, boards, agency panels, etc., should be adjudicated by a federal court that can exercise jurisdiction over the underlying subject matter or the alleged contemnor. The proceedings should be governed by federal rules of practice and procedure (i.e., Criminal Rule 42) as if the contempt arose in proceedings before the federal court receiving the certification itself.<sup>46</sup>

Second, I propose that Congress harmonize one hundred and fifty or so statutes and regulations governing subpoena enforcement for the departments and independent agencies within the executive branch referred to above. I crafted model language to facilitate this objective. Congress can incorporate this language into a statute or regulation. This language states that the certification of a matter involving the enforcement of a subpoena issued by an administrative entity should be adjudicated under the relevant federal rules of practice and procedure governing the federal court that can exercise jurisdiction over the administrative process or the person accused of contempt of the subpoena. The federal court that has jurisdiction over the administrative proceeding requiring the enforcement of a subpoena should then adjudicate a contempt of the relevant administrative entity as if it arose in proceedings before that court itself.<sup>47</sup>

D. Criminal Contempt Sentencing Guidelines

I am content with the current sentencing regime for criminal contempt statutes established by United States Guidelines 2J1.1 and 2X5.1. The United States Sentencing Commission should, however, amend these guidelines to reflect my proposed amendments to Title 18, Section 401 of the United States Code. Because the proposed amendments render most, if not all, criminal contempt statutes superfluous, the guidelines must reflect the repeal of those statutes. The Sentencing Commission should also modify the guidelines to reference statutes that sound in criminal contempt but are not eliminated by my proposed reforms.<sup>48</sup>

E. Contempt Rules of Civil Procedure

The Standing Committee should modify the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure by adopting a new rule comprehensively governing (constructive) civil contempt. The new rule should be an analogue to Criminal Rule 42 and styled as “Civil Rule 42.” The numerology of the Civil Rules following New Civil Rule 42 should “bump down” to create as much symmetry as possible between the Civil Rules and Criminal Rules.

My inspiration for a comprehensive federal civil contempt rule arises in part from civil contempt provisions found in the local rules of the United States District Courts for the Northern, Southern, Eastern, and Western Districts of New York; the Eastern District of North Carolina; the Southern District of West Virginia; the rules of specialty courts like the United States Court of Claims, the United States Court of International Trade, the United States Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court; and the rules of state courts with civil contempt rules like the State of Maryland.<sup>49</sup> A comprehensive civil contempt rule is practical because it improves the harmony between the various rules of practice and procedure. A comprehensive civil contempt rule is also justified for pedagogical reasons: it instructs the bench and bar how civil contempt processes work, what purge conditions are available, etc.

New Civil Rule 42 should be framed to achieve the following objectives:

- (1) Define civil contempt and distinguish it from criminal contempt;
- (2) Explain that the scope of the rule encompasses civil contempt under the Civil Rules, local rules, and statutes sounding in civil contempt;
- (3) Articulate discrepancies in contempt authority between Article III judges and judicial officers, such as masters, magistrates, bankruptcy judges, etc.;
- (4) Explain that an institution that cannot exercise inherent or statutory contempt power can certify a contempt in proceedings before them to an institution that can under this particular rule;
- (5) Clarify the authority of the court to initiate civil (constructive) contempt proceedings sua sponte;
- (6) Clarify that parties in interest to a case can petition for civil (constructive) contempt;
- (7) List the requirements for a party-initiated petition for civil (constructive) contempt;

- (8) List the requirements for a show cause order to be entered by the court upon granting a petition;
- (9) List the requirements for service of process;
- (10) Cross-reference other rules as necessary when special exemptions or applications are in order; Clarify the wide range of purge conditions that a court can impose; and
- (11) Clarify that civil contempt proceedings do not foreclose concurrent or consecutive criminal contempt proceedings.

The committee note to New Civil Rule 42 should reference published federal appellate precedents exemplifying the variety of purge conditions available. These precedents should include cases when courts held parties in constructive civil and constructive criminal contempt simultaneously, provide guidance on how to proceed when such a finding is appropriate, and explain how such cases are treated on appeal.<sup>50</sup>

Contempt provisions in Old Civil Rules 4.1, 37(b), 53, 56, and 70 must be amended in light of the implementation of New Civil Rule 42. New Civil Rule 42 will supersede Old Civil Rule 4.1(b); therefore, the latter should be deleted. Civil Rule 4.1 should also be restyled to remove subsection (a) from the header because there is only one provision in the new version of the rule, not two. Old Civil Rule 37 should be amended. Section (b) of Old Civil Rule 37 should focus on non-contempt sanctions. This way there is no danger of surplusage in New Civil Rule 42. Subsections (b)(1) and (b)(2)(vii) of Old Civil Rule 37 should be simplified by incorporating an internal cross-reference to New Civil Rule 42 and revised Criminal Rule 42. Old Civil Rule 45 should be renumbered as New Civil Rule 46.<sup>51</sup>

The amendments to Civil Rule 42 will render Subsection (g) of Old Civil Rule 42 superfluous, therefore, Subsection (g) of Old Civil Rule 42 should be deleted. Old Civil Rule 53 should be renumbered as New Civil Rule 54. New Civil Rule 42 will render

Subsection (c)(2) of Old Civil Rule 42 superfluous, and therefore, Subsection (c)(2) of Old Civil Rule 42 should be deleted. Old Civil Rule 56 should be renumbered as New Civil Rule 57. The amendments to New Civil Rule 42 will render the contempt language in Section (h) of Old Civil Rule 42 superfluous, therefore, Section (h) of Old Civil Rule 42 should be deleted. New Civil Rule 42 should internally cross-reference New Civil Rule 42 and revised Criminal Rule 42 in lieu of Section (h) of Old Civil Rule 42. Old Civil Rule 70 should be renumbered as New Civil Rule 71. The amendments to New Civil Rule 42 will render Section (e) of Old Civil Rule 42 superfluous, therefore, Section (e) of Old Civil Rule 42 should be deleted.<sup>52</sup>

F. Contempt Rules of Criminal Procedure

The Standing Committee should revise Criminal Rule 42 to eliminate unnecessary criminal contempt statutes and trim unnecessary contempt provisions in other criminal rules. There is no need to “bump down” the numerology of subsequent rules in the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. The Standing Committee should amend other criminal rules with contempt provisions, however, in light of my proposed amendments revising Criminal Rule 42.

Revised Criminal Rule 42 does the following:

- (1) Defines criminal contempt and distinguishes it from civil contempt;
- (2) Explains that the scope of the rule encompasses criminal contempt under the Criminal Rules, local rules, and statutes sounding in criminal contempt;
- (3) Articulates discrepancies between contempt power of Article III judges and judicial officers, such as masters, magistrates, bankruptcy judges, etc.;

---

<sup>52</sup> Id.

- (4) Explains that authorities who cannot exercise inherent or statutory contempt power can certify contempt to federal courts that can specifically under this rule;
- (5) Clarifies the authority of the court to initiate criminal (direct and constructive) contempt proceedings sua sponte;
- (6) Clarifies that parties in interest to a case can petition for criminal (constructive) contempt;
- (7) Lists the requirements for a party-initiated petition for criminal (constructive) contempt;
- (8) Lists the requirements for a show cause order to be entered by the court upon granting a petition;
- (9) Lists the requirements for service of process;
- (10) Cross-references other rules as necessary when special exemptions or applications apply;
- (11) Clarifies the wide range of penalties that can be imposed; and
- (12) Clarifies that criminal contempt proceedings do not foreclose consecutive or concurrent civil contempt proceedings.

The committee note to revised Criminal Rule 42 should reference published federal appellate precedents exemplifying the variety of penalties and the relevant guidelines in the United States Sentencing Guidelines for executing them. These precedents should include cases when a party was held in constructive civil and constructive criminal contempt simultaneously and provide guidance on how to proceed when such a finding is appropriate.<sup>53</sup>

One might contend that prosecutors should have absolute discretion and the final word in criminal contempt matters, therefore, there should be no appointment of independent prosecutors if the executive does not wish to prosecute.<sup>54</sup> I disagree. The doctrine of separation of powers must not be left in a vacuum. The inherent authority of the federal judiciary, in my view, encompasses the ability to appoint independent counsel to represent and effectuate its institutional prerogatives, especially in proceedings initiated to vindicate those prerogatives.

The ultimate tool of the executive for balancing the power distributed between it and the judiciary in criminal contempt proceedings is not prosecutorial discretion by a “semi-autonomous” Department of Justice; it is the power of the President of the United States to grant pardons. The Standing Committee should therefore modify Old Criminal Rule 6(e) to internally cross-reference New Civil Rule 42 and revised Criminal Rule 42. Old Criminal Rule 7(a) should be modified to internally cross-reference revised Criminal Rule 42. Old Criminal Rule 17(g) is rendered superfluous by revised Criminal Rule 42(g); therefore, Old Criminal Rule 17(g) should be eliminated.<sup>55</sup>

G. Contempt Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure

I propose that the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure be modified in light of my proposed statutory reform officially conferring bankruptcy courts with contempt power. If and when bankruptcy courts are statutorily given contempt power, Bankruptcy Rule 9020 should be amended to simply state that New Civil Rule 42 and revised Criminal Rule 42 govern contempt matters in proceedings before bankruptcy courts. Bankruptcy Rule 9020’s current internal cross-reference to Bankruptcy Rule 9014 should be eliminated.<sup>56</sup>

H. Contempt Rules of Appellate Procedure

I propose that the Standing Committee modify the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure by adopting a new rule governing contempt in appellate proceedings that is designated as Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 42. All rules subsequent to New Appellate Rule 42 should “bump down.” New Appellate Rule 42 should simply state that New Civil Rule 42 and revised Criminal Rule 42 govern contempt matters in proceedings before federal appellate courts. Again, this will improve the harmony, efficiency, and clarity of the federal rules of practice and procedure as a whole.<sup>57</sup>

I. Contempt Rules of Evidentiary Procedure

The Standing Committee should modify Evidence Rule 1101 to internally cross-reference revised Criminal Rule 42(c).<sup>58</sup>

J. Contempt Rules of Specialty Courts

I propose that Article III specialty courts uniformly adopt a model contempt rule into their local rules. This model contempt rule will render all other contempt provisions unnecessary. This model contempt rule will simply state that contempt will be adjudicated under New Civil Rule 42 and revised Criminal Rule 42. My preference is that this model rule is uniformly styled as “Rule 42” to maintain the symmetry of contempt provisions between national and local rules of practice and procedure.<sup>59</sup>

I propose that Article I specialty courts uniformly adopt a model contempt rule. This model contempt rule will render all other local contempt provisions currently in force for such courts unnecessary. This model rule must have two different versions because not all Article I specialty courts are statutorily delegated the contempt power, and even if so, not necessarily to the same degree as Article III courts. My preference is that both versions of this model rule—whichever is applicable—be uniformly adopted and styled by the Article I specialty court in question as “Rule 42” to maintain the symmetry in contempt provisions between national rules of practice and procedure and local or jurisdictionally specific ones.<sup>60</sup>

The first version of this rule, applicable to Article I specialty courts that are statutorily delegated contempt power by Congress, should dictate that the rules of those courts are enforceable through civil and criminal contempt proceedings in the same manner as articulated in New Civil Rule 42 and revised Criminal Rule 42. This model rule applies to the United States Court of Federal Claims and the United States Tax Court.<sup>61</sup>

The second version of this rule, applicable to Article I specialty courts that are not statutorily delegated contempt power by Congress, should dictate that their rules are enforceable through certification of contempt matters to a federal district court that can exercise jurisdiction over the subject matter or over the alleged contemnor in the underlying proceeding. This model rule applies to the United States Trademark Trial and Appeal Board, the United States Patent Trial and Appeal Board, the Armed Services Board of Contract Appeals, the Civilian Board of Contract Appeals, the Postal Service Board of Contract Appeals, the United States Merit Systems Protection Board, and the United States International Trade Commission.<sup>62</sup>

K. Contempt Rules and Secondary Sources

The Federal Judicial Center should collaborate with the Standing Committee towards creating a manual on contempt power. This manual should include a concise history of the contempt power; a glossary referencing every contempt provision in federal rules, regulations, statutes; and a bibliography of helpful scholarly treatises, law review articles, and other secondary authorities explicating federal contempt law. The manual should gloss leading case law from every circuit on every facet of contempt law. The bench book for federal district judges and the manual on recurring problems in criminal trials contain some good material to start with. But the manual I envision will be grander in scope so that it is helpful to every judge in every court.<sup>63</sup>

L. Contempt Rules of Circuit Procedure

I propose reforms for rules that govern at the regional level of the federal judiciary, that is, rules governing the United States Circuits Courts of Appeals and Judicial Councils. These reforms should go hand-in-hand with proposed statutory reforms. The Standing Committee should modify Judicial Conduct and Judicial Disability Rule 13(d) to explicitly state that contempt proceedings will be conducted in a manner that substantially conforms to New Civil Rule 42 and revised Criminal Rule 42. The current rule does not articulate how the contempt power of a special investigative committee interfaces, if at all, with contempt procedures outlined in the federal rules of practice and procedure. The processes I propose in New Civil Rule 42 and revised Criminal Rule 42 are sufficient to guide special investigative committees in enforcing the Judicial Conduct and Disability Act through contempt proceedings.<sup>64</sup>

I also propose that a model local rule be uniformly adopted and incorporated into regional rules affecting United States Circuits Courts of Appeals and other specialty appellate courts, such as the United States Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims. This model rule should dictate that the rules of the circuit or specialty appellate court in question are controlled by New Civil Rule 42 and revised Criminal Rule 42. My preference is that this model local rule be incorporated and styled as “Local Rule 42” to maintain the symmetry of all contempt provisions between the local rules of all circuit courts of appeals, the local rules of specialty appellate courts, and the federal rules of practice and procedure.<sup>65</sup>

M. Contempt Rules of Local Procedure

I propose revisions to the Rules for the Supreme Court of the United States and the local rules of United States District Courts, Bankruptcy Courts, and Territorial Courts. Though Supreme Court Rules are not “local rules” for the purposes of Civil Rule 83, I nevertheless address them here because they are effectively local rules specific to the Supreme Court as the court of last resort. To that end, I propose that the Supreme Court adopt a single rule governing its exercise of contempt power. Because the Supreme Court’s rules are sui generis, however, I do not recommend that they merely replicate the contents of New Civil Rule 42 and revised Criminal Rule New 42 as I recommended for the local rules of the lower courts.

Less is more when it comes to the highest court in the land—the fountainhead for the judiciary’s inherent power. I fear that words do more to constrict than to empower here. I therefore think it is sufficient for the Supreme Court to merely institute a rule declaring that the Court has both inherent and implied constitutional authority to correct disobedience and punish indignities against its prerogatives, including through civil and criminal contempt proceedings. No further details are required.<sup>66</sup>

Thanks to the language in New Civil Rule 42(a)(1)(ii) and revised Criminal Rule 42(a)(5)(iv), most if not all contempt provisions in local rules promulgated under Civil Rule 83 are rendered superfluous and should be eliminated.<sup>67</sup> Pending the implementation of my proposed modifications to the Civil Rules and Criminal Rules, however, I offer model local rules to be uniformly adopted by Article III district courts and Article IV territorial courts as well as Article I specialty courts.

These model local rules should simply state that the “local rules” in question are enforceable through civil and criminal contempt proceedings as articulated in New Civil Rule 42 and revised Criminal Rule 42. My preference is that this model local rule be incorporated and styled as “Local Rule 42” to maintain the symmetry in contempt provisions across all national and local rules of practice and procedure. Individual chambers should feel free to refer to these rules in their chambers-specific orders and guidelines.<sup>68</sup>

IV. CONCLUSION

The basic principles of contempt power under English common law are manifest in federal common law. The interbranch framework for judicial rulemaking instituted by the Rules Enabling Act generated the authorities governing contempt procedures today. But those procedures are deficient in multiple respects. The strategic plan of the federal judiciary emphasizes the importance of enhancing access to justice and the judicial process by ensuring that court rules, processes, and procedures meet the needs of lawyers. This article proposes three overarching reforms for fulfilling the objectives established by the federal judiciary’s strategic plan in the context of federal contempt law.<sup>69</sup>

First, I propose making 18 U.S.C. § 401 and Criminal Rule 42 more comprehensive. This reform will lay the groundwork for eliminating most if not all criminal contempt statutes. It will therefore reduce unnecessary bulk in the federal code. It will also shift the burden of discretion for punishing contemptuous behavior from prosecutors back to the judiciary, a shift I think is both legally sound and normatively justified.

Second, I propose amendments streamlining contempt procedures for every federal adjudicative body, including Article I courts, Article III courts, and Article IV courts. I recommend, for example, that the Standing Committee draft a civil analogue to Rule 42 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. By implementing a comprehensive civil contempt rule, the Standing Committee will eliminate disparate contempt provisions found in other areas of the rules of practice and procedure, the rules of specialty courts, and local rules. All of these improvements will make federal procedural common law more concise, clear, and compact.

Third, I propose model local contempt rules that nationalize best practices from district courts whose rules are exceptionally helpful. The standardization of rules at the local level across the country relieves the need for rules at the national level to be unnecessarily granular. Improvements at each level of the procedural hierarchy have a positive cascading effect in reinforcing the clarity and coherence of the whole system.

My hope is that all of these proposals will enhance the dignity and efficacy of the judicial system and therefore benefit the bench and bar alike.

V. APPENDIX A: PROPOSED STATUTORY REFORMS<sup>70</sup>

<sup>70</sup> I provide the boilerplate language for these reforms below. C. Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of [Year]

An Act

To amend Title 11 of the United States Code regarding the authority of bankruptcy courts to initiate contempt proceedings.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of [Year].

TITLE I—BANKRUPTCY JURISDICTION AND PROCEDURE

Sec. 105(a) of Title 11, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

“§ 105. Power of Court

“(a) The court may issue any order, process, or judgment that is necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title, including orders for civil and criminal contempt. No provision of this title providing for the raising of an issue by a party in interest shall be construed to preclude the court from, sua sponte, taking any action or making any determination necessary or appropriate to enforce or implement court orders or rules, or to prevent an abuse of process.

D. 11 U.S.C. § 105 – Power of Court

- (a) The court may issue any order, process, or judgment that is necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title, including orders for civil and criminal contempt. No provision of this title providing for the raising of an issue by a party in interest shall be construed to preclude the court from, sua sponte, taking any action or making any determination necessary or appropriate to enforce or implement court orders or rules, or to prevent an abuse of process.

E. Model Contempt Statute for Administrative Law Courts

Enforcement. If a person is allegedly contemptuous of a [administrative law authority], that [administrative law authority] can, at its discretion, certify the facts underlying that allegation to any federal district court that can exercise jurisdiction over the matter or where the alleged contemnor resides or carries on business. The district court must adjudicate the certified contempt allegation under the federal rules of practice and procedure as if those facts arose in a proceeding before that same district court.

F. Model Contempt Statute for Enforcing Agency Subpoenas

The [department, agency, board, authority, etc.] can make such investigations as the [department, agency, board, authority, etc.] deems necessary for the effective administration of this chapter or to determine whether any person subject to this [title, chapter, subtitle, etc.] engaged or is about to engage in any act that constitutes or will constitute a violation of this [title, chapter, subtitle, etc.], an order issued to facilitate the execution of this [title, chapter, subtitle, etc.], or any rule or regulation issued under this [title, chapter, subtitle, etc.].

For the purpose of such investigation, the [department, agency, board, authority, etc.] can administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any records that are relevant to the inquiry. The [department, agency, board, authority, etc.] can require attendance of witnesses and the production of records from any place in the United States or abroad. In case of refusal to obey a subpoena, the [department, agency, board, authority, etc.] can certify the matter to any district court that can exercise jurisdiction over the investigation or where the alleged violator resides or carries on business. The federal district court can require the attendance and testimony of the alleged violator and the production of records. The federal district court may issue an order requiring the alleged violator to appear before the [department, agency, board, authority, etc.] to produce records or to give testimony regarding the matter under investigation.

The district court can punish and correct any failure to obey its orders through any means permitted under the federal rules of practice and procedure, including through contempt proceedings governed by those rules. Service of process in these cases must occur in the judicial district where the person is an inhabitant or wherever the person can be found.

VI. APPENDIX B: PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO RULES OF PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE

Below are proposed revisions to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Criminal Procedure, Bankruptcy Procedure, Evidence, and Judicial Conduct and Disability.

A. FED. R. CIV. P. 4.1: Serving Other Process

~~(a) In General. Process—Other than a summons under Rule 4 or a subpoena under Rule 45—must be served by a United States marshal or deputy marshal or by a person specially appointed for that purpose. It may be served anywhere within the territorial limits of the state where the district court is located and, if authorized by a federal statute, beyond those limits. Proof of service must be made under Rule 4(l).~~

~~(b) Enforcing Orders: Committing for Civil Contempt. An order committing a person for civil contempt of a decree or injunction issued to enforce federal law may be served and enforced in any district. Any other order in a civil contempt proceeding may be served only in the state where the issuing court is located or elsewhere in the United States within 100 miles from where the order was issued.~~

B. FED. R. CIV. P. 37: Failure to Disclose or to Cooperate in Discovery; Sanctions

(b) Failure to Comply with a Court Order.

(1) Sanctions Sought in the District Where the Deposition Is Taken. If the court where the discovery is taken orders a deponent to be sworn or to answer a question and the deponent fails to obey, the failure may be ~~treated as contempt of court~~ sanctioned. If a deposition-related motion is transferred to the court where the action is pending, and that court orders a deponent to be sworn or to answer a question and the deponent fails to obey, the failure may be ~~treated as contempt of~~ sanctioned by either the court where the discovery is taken or the court where the action is pending.

(2) Sanctions Sought in the District Where the Action Is Pending.

(A) For Not Obeying a Discovery Order. If a party or a party's officer, director, or managing agent--or a witness designated under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 30(b)(6) or 31(a)(4)—fails to obey an order to provide or permit discovery, including an order under Rule 26(f), 35, or 37(a), the court where the action is pending may issue further just orders. They may include the following:

- (i) directing that the matters embraced in the order or other designated facts be taken as established for purposes of the action, as the prevailing party claims;
- (ii) prohibiting the disobedient party from supporting or opposing designated claims or defenses, or from introducing designated matters in evidence;
- (iii) striking pleadings in whole or in part;
- (iv) staying further proceedings until the order is obeyed;

- (v) dismissing the action or proceeding in whole or in part;
- (vi) rendering a default judgment against the disobedient party;
- (vii) initiating sanction proceedings under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 11; or
- (viii) ~~treating as contempt of court the failure to obey any order except an order to submit to a physical or mental examination~~ initiating contempt proceedings under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 42 and Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 42.

C. [New] Fed. R. Civ. P. 42: Civil Contempt

(a) Definition.

(1) Civil contempt is disobedience out the court out of the court's presence, such as

- (i) A violation of a court order or decree;
- (ii) A violation of a local rule or chambers policy promulgated under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 83; and
- (iii) A violation of a statute constituting contempt per se.

(2) Civil contempt is coercive, not punitive.

- (3) A purge condition is a condition that must be satisfied in order to avoid or lift a coercive measure imposed by the court to coerce compliance with an order or decree.

(b) Authority.

- (1) Courts that possess inherent, constitutional, or statutory authority to adjudicate civil contempt proceedings are governed by this rule.
- (2) Masters can recommend civil contempt sanctions and certify them for disposition by a court with the proper authority to adjudicate the matter under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54 [former Rule 53].
- (3) Other persons or courts who do not possess inherent, constitutional, or statutory authority to adjudicate civil contempt proceedings, but are authorized to recommend them, may certify those recommendations for disposition under this rule.

(c) Procedure

- (1) Civil contempt proceedings must be included in the same action where the alleged contempt occurred unless the matter is certified from a person or courts lacks authority to conduct the proceeding.
- (2) The court may initiate a civil contempt proceeding sua sponte.
- (3) A party to an action can initiate a civil contempt proceeding by filing a petition with the court against the alleged contemnor.

- (4) An order issued sua sponte under (c)(2) or in response to a petition under (c)(3) must schedule a prehearing conference, a hearing, or both. Additionally, it must
  - (i) recite a short and plain basis for the civil contempt proceeding under (c)(2) or (c)(3);
  - (ii) schedule deadline for the filing of an answer by the alleged contemnor;
  - (iii) state the time and place of any prehearing conference or hearing; and
  - (iv) state the purge conditions requested, if any, under (c)(2) or contemplated by the court under (b)(3), including, fines and any period of incarceration.

- (5) After a prehearing conference or hearing is concluded, the court must determine if the following elements are established by clear and convincing evidence:
  - (i) A valid order or decree of the court was in effect;
  - (ii) The alleged contemnor knew of that order or decree; and
  - (iii) The alleged contemnor breached it.

- (6) If the court determines that the alleged contemnor was guilty of civil contempt, the court must issue an order that
  - (i) provides a short and concise explanation of its disposition;

- (ii) lists the purge conditions imposed to enforce compliance with the breached order or decree; and
- (iii) states the precise manner in which the purge conditions must be satisfied.

(7) If the court issues an order finding an alleged contemnor guilty of civil contempt and imposes incarceration as a purge condition, that order can be served and enforced in any district. All other orders issued in a civil contempt proceeding may be served only in the state where the issuing court is located or elsewhere in the United States within 100 miles from where the order was issued.

(d) Purge Conditions. Purge conditions for civil contempt must involve the least possible power adequate to the end proposed and must be possible to perform. They may be imposed individually or in combination. They may be imposed immediately upon a finding of civil contempt or as a contingent liability of the contemnor does not comply with an order of court by a specified deadline. The following is an inexhaustive list of purge conditions:

(1) Reprimand;

(2) Report to any state bar or equivalent professional body; and

(3) Fine;

- (i) A fine may be payable to the court, to a party prejudiced by the contempt as compensation, or some other recipient for the purpose of promoting compliance.

- (ii) A fine must be calculated according to the character and magnitude of the harm threatened by continued breach of the court's order or decree.
- (e) Incarceration. The court may impose a period of incarceration on the contemnor immediately until they comply with the breached order or decree or until another purge condition is satisfied.
- (f) Criminal Contempt.
